Thekadar.

(1) — Thekadar, meaning of.—The term "Thekadar" is properly applied to hereditary cultivators only when they have also a theka or lease of a share, in or the whole of, the profits of an estate, and it by no means refers to their cultivatory rights. The term is never used as convertible with mourousee, assamee or khastkar. BAIJ NATH v. MUNGLEE, 2 N.W.P. 411.

(2)—Thekadar, who is—Creation of interest—Formalities—Acceptance of theka—Effect.—A thekadar is ordinarily a person who holds a theka or lease of the whole of a zemindar's interest in a village. It is not essential that the theka should be in writing. There is nothing in the law which renders a writing necessary to the creation of such an interest. It is not to be inferred from the mere circumstance that certain persons accepted a theka, that they forewent their then existing rights. LEELA DHUR v. BHUGWANT, 3 N.W.P. 39.

(3)—Holding from inferior proprietor—Liability to superior proprietor.—A thekadar holding from an inferior proprietor is not as such responsible to the superior proprietor, and the latter has no concern with any arrangements which the inferior proprietors may come to amongst themselves for the collection of rents. Third Party Directions.

(1)—Third party directions—General principles — Practice — Procedure.—The general principles on which a Court will issue third party directions are: (1) that there must be a clear case of contribution or indemnity from the third party; (2) that all the disputes arising out of a transaction, as between the plaintiff and the defendant, and between the defendant and a third party can be tried and settled in one action; and (3) that, in cases of contract and sub-contract, it must appear that the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant has been imported into the contract between the defendant and the third party. W. AND A. GRAHAM & CO. v. CHUNILAL HARILAL & CO., 11 Bom. L.R. 1056=34 B. 423=4 Ind. Cas. 131.

(2)—Third party proceedings, object of—When leave should be granted—Refusal to give directions on summons amounts to a dismissal of the third party—High Court Rules, Ch. VIII.—The object of third party proceedings is to enable the Court to try once for all an issue of fact in which all parties are alike interested. The Court has to see, first, that nothing is done which would put a plaintiff to additional expense or difficulty, and secondly, that he is not embarrassed by the introduction of third parties in his suit. An action comes to an end as regards the third party when the Court refuses to give directions on summons. Such refusal amounts to a dismissal of the third party from the action. In giving leave to serve notice of claim for contribution or indemnity on a third party, the Court will not consider whether the claim is a valid one but only whether the claim is bona fide, and whether, if established, it will result in contribution or indemnity. SHIVLAL v. SHRIKISSON AND MITCHELL AND CO., 9 Bom. L.R. 374=31 B. 465.

Thugy's Register.

(1)—Revenue Register No. IX—Entries in —Presumptive proof—Proof of a document, Stages in the.—Revenue Register No. IX is generally a record of what the parties tell a thugyi. The entry of an outright sale or a mortgage in Register IX is strong prima facie evidence in favour of the party proving such entry, but this presumption may be rebutted by oral evidence or by the conduct of the parties themselves. A document should not be placed on the record till fully proved or admitted. It may be well to point out that there are two stages in the proof of a document. The first stage is to establish the fact that a document of a particular nature exists and is in the custody of a particular person, and the second stage is to identify the document produced in Court as being the identical document referred to. If document are admitted by the parties or their pleaders against whom they are produced, both stages are complete and the endorsement should be "admitted by plaintiff or defendant." If the existence or execution is denied, the document be proved by the testimony of one or more witnesses and endorsed "Proved by witness Maung..." If not proved or admitted the documents should be marked "Rejected" and returned to the parties producing them. KYAW ZAN v. MAUNG THA DUN, L.B.R. 1893—1900, 616.

(2)—Entry of mutation of names and transfer of occupancy right — Oral Contract.—When mutations and transfers take place under a law which allows alienation of occupancy right, then as between private persons the mere record in a revenue register of a transfer does not of itself sufficiently show without further evidence what were the terms of the transaction in which such mutation and transfer in the revenue register have taken place, and even representations made as to this by the parties to the mutation may have been falsely made to serve their own purposes. When the terms of the contract under which the mutation took place have not been reduced to writing in an instrument of title duly executed, and the terms of the oral contract under which that mutation took place are in dispute, any direct evidence as to the making of the oral evidence may be supplemented or rebutted by evidence as to possession and enjoyment and other surrounding facts of probative value. Tirni.

(1)—Tirni or grazing dues—Lambardar entering in his own name cattle of another—Liability to pay grazing dues.—The points for decision in this case were whether proprietors in the district of Montgomery who were the owners of cattle were liable to pay the grazing dues known as tirni for the year 1875-1876, and whether the defendant, a lambardar of the village, was liable for the dues in respect of the cattle of which the owner's names were not disclosed by him at the time of enumeration of the cattle of the village. On the first point the Chief Court decided that, whether the tirni Rules of 1860 or of 1872 were in force on 1st April, 1875, when the financial year 1875-1876 commenced and the liability for that year attached to the defendants in the suit, the defendants were liable to pay tirni for that year for their village which then stood upon the tirni Guzar list. On the question as to the liability of the defendant lambardar to pay dues for certain cattle, it appeared on the evidence that when the tirni Moharrir went to the village in order to enumerate the cattle, the lambardar caused the cattle to be entered in his name after declining to give the names of the real owners, and under the circumstances the Courts had properly held that it was not open to him to deny his responsibility for the dues upon the above cattle, or even that there was an implied contract that he would himself pay. (2)—Possession—Prima facie evidence of title—Burden of proof.—Possession is prima facie evidence of title, and is primarily exclusive, and it is for him who impugns this exclusive title, to show that the possession originated in a way not to affect his own right. (7 & 8)—Boundary disputes—Property attached for benefit of real owner—Previous possession evidence of title.—Disputes respecting the boundaries of the Zamindaries of Yettiapooram and Ramnad, in the District of Madura, having led to acts of violence by the ryots, the Government, in the year 1836, to preserve the public peace, attached the disputed lands and took possession for the benefit of the party to whom the lands should be judicially awarded. At and before the time of the Government taking such possession, the Zemindar of Yettiapooram was in possession of certain lands adjacent to, and taken as a part of, the lands in dispute. The lands remained under attachment by Government for a period of nearly twenty years; no steps having been taken regarding them till the year 1855, when the Zemindar of Yettiapooram brought a suit against the Collector of Madura and the Zemindar of Ramnad, to recover possession of the land so formerly occupied by him, and for the mesne profits thereof while in possession of the Government. Although no clear title in this suit was proved by either Zemindar, it was held by the Courts in India, and affirmed on appeal by the Judicial Committee, that the fact of possession of the lands by the Zemindar of Yettiapooram before, and at, the time of the attachment by the Government was, in the circumstances, evidence of title, and the Government was ordered to restore the lands to him. GOLAM REZA CHOWDHRY v. CHANDOO MEAH LUSHKUR, 15 W.R. 45.

(10)—Possession, presumption of, from evidence of title—Waste lands.—In disputes as to the right to possession of jungle lands, it is only in cases where neither party has exercised any acts of ownership over the lands in question that the Court may resort to evidence of title, and presume that the party proved to have the title has also possession. not parcel of the ancestral jammai. On appeal, the lower appellate Court found that the plaintiff had proved that he had been in possession of plot No. 1, and was therefore entitled to it also. On second appeal, the High Court held that the plaintiff was bound to prove not only possession but also title, and that, as he had not proved his title to plot No. 1, he was not entitled to it. Held, on appeal under s. 15, Letters Patent, that, on second appeal, the High Court was not entitled to question the sufficiency of the evidence or the propriety of the finding, and that plot No. 2 having been found to be parcel of the jammai, it was sufficient to give evidence of possession and ownership to prove that the other plot was also parcel. The High Court held that the judgment of the lower appellate Court contained the finding that the plaintiff possessed no kudeemee mourasee right and that the judgment of that Court had been based on the absence of any claim by the plaintiff to that right on occasions when he might naturally have been expected to assert it had he possessed it. (22)—Conflicting evidence—Criterion of truth—Proclamation—Reg. XXXVII of 1793, s. 20—Registration—Presumption — Muddudmash—Onus.—There is no better criterion of the truth, no safer rule for investigating cases of conflicting evidence—where perjury and fraud must exist on the one side or the other—than to consider what facts are beyond dispute, and to examine which of the two cases best accords with those facts according to the ordinary course of human affairs and the usual habits of life. The act of registration after a proclamation under s. 20, Regulation XXXVII of 1793, amounts to a public, open and notorious assertion of title on the one side, and the omission to register, unexplained by proof of the ill-health of the claimant, or absence in a distant country, or ignorance, affords an equally strong presumption of the non-existence of any title on the other. Where a party sought to obtain possession of certain property denominated a Muddudmash against a defendant, whose adverse possession had existed from 1761, upon the allegation that such adverse possession was in the character of agent to the plaintiff, the Judicial Committee held (affirming the judgment of the Court below) that the proof of such agency lay on the plaintiff; and the balance of evidence being in favour of the defendant's right to possession, the circumstances of his having registered himself as owner in 1797, without any opposition, or subsequent claim, to register on the part of the plaintiff, and having continued in undisturbed possession from that period, was conclusive against the claim set up by the plaintiff. can be relied on. Mulki papers or returns filed by elakadars under the provisions of Reg. VIII of 1800, para 3, although not of the same evidentiary value as the Registers themselves. inasmuch as they require proof of origin and authentication, are nevertheless good evidence of title, if they contain statements made at a time when there was no dispute and against the proprietary interest of the maker. Statements made in road-cess returns by khorposhdars or holders of a maintenance grant as to the character of their tenure are good evidence of title against a defendant claiming under them, if not as admissions, certainly as positive evidence in support of plaintiff's claim. A plaintiff may rely on the admissions of defendant as to his title in proof of his claim just as much as on any other evidence, and if a defendant goes into the witness-box and admits his title, there is no further onus upon him to prove it, at least as against such defendant. An erroneous statement made without knowledge in an affidavit filed as a matter of routine, by a person whose authority to make it was not proved, could not bind a party to a proceeding, nor affect the character of a sale held in such proceeding under the provisions of s. 124, Act I (B.C.) of 1879, so as to confer upon the auction purchaser a right which he could not obtain by the sale itself. (25)—Ancestral property—Suit for confirmation of possession of share—Self-acquisition—Onus—Registration in Collector's books, not of itself proof of title.—Plaintiff came into Court alleging that, although there were four brothers, sons of the common ancestor, who would, under the ordinary rules of Hindu law, be the inheritors of the property in equal shares jointly, still the property in suit was not that of the common ancestor but the self-acquisition of two of his grandsons. Defendants stated that there was no such self-acquisition as was alleged by the plaintiff and that the four brothers inherited equal shares of the property. Plaintiff was, under the circumstances, held to be bound in the first place to prove his allegation of self-acquisition and, the suit being one for confirmation of possession, he was also bound fully to show his previous possession. Registration by itself not amounting to proof of title the lower Court had erred in law when it treated the registration in the Collector's book as the main evidence in proof of the plaintiff's allegation; until, therefore, plaintiff did prove self-acquisition in a legal way, he could not be entitled to any decree. The proper prayer for relief should be for an award of his share in the property of the deceased or for a declaration of his right to such a share and not for the entry of his name in the Collector's book. The fact that another person's name has been entered in the Collector's book, as occupant of the land, does not necessarily of itself establish that person's title or defeat the title of the plaintiff. When a man enters into a contract of purchase with another, and receives the purchase-money, and the contract is one which, under the law in force at the time, requires registration, he does virtually agree that he will register that contract and so enable the other party to reap all the advantages of it, and is therefore compellable to do so. Where a plaintiff alleges that he is in possession of property and asks for a declaration of his title only, the bona fides of that title being questioned by the defendant, it is for the plaintiff to make out that that title is really and substantially what it purports to be on the face of the deed on which he relies. (40)—Person dispossessed suing to establish title to property, not bound to set aside decree under s. 15 of Act XIV of 1859.—The suit of the plaintiff who had been dispossessed of immoveable property was based on title, and so it was held that he had no occasion to ask distinctly for setting aside a decree that had been awarded to the defendant under s. 15 of Act XIV of 1859, because on plaintiff's succeeding in obtaining a decree on title, the effect of defendants' decree would by itself cease and determine. Held also that the lower appellate Court was not justified in dismissing the suit merely because the boundaries in the plaint differed from the boundaries in the decree under s. 15 of Act XIV of 1859. If, for the lands sought to be obtained by the plaintiff in the present suit, he could show title, he would be entitled to obtain a decree. SREENATH SURMAH v. BISHONATH SURMAH, 6 W.R. 268.

(42)—Civil Court, competency of, to decree possession in suit on allegation of illegal dispossession—Defendant's failure to prove title—Adverse possession for statutory period, title even against rightful owner—Prior possession for shorter period, sufficient title against mere wrong-doer.—Notwithstanding the provisions of s. 15 of Act XIV of 1859, it is competent to Civil Courts to give a decree for immoveable property on the bare ground of illegal dispossession in a suit brought after six months from the date of such dispossession, where the defendant has failed to prove his own title to the same. Irrespective of the said s. 15 of Act XIV, the High Court held that possession for a period of sixty years and upwards is sufficient to create a title in the possessor which no other person can question or repudiate. Also, adverse possession, for any period sufficient under the Limitation Act, is itself a title, even against the rightful owner himself, and against a mere wrong-doer, prior possession however short will itself support title. Illegal dispossession is itself a good cause of action such as the Civil Courts are bound to recognise. In the case of suits for recovery of immoveable property on allegation of dispossession, the Civil Courts have to determine the particular cause of action that has arisen between the parties to the suit; and it is with reference to this cause of action only that their determination would be final and conclusive as provided for by s. 2, Act VIII of 1859. They cannot look beyond the parties to the suit and proceed to find out who is the rightful owner if the plaintiff and defendant are not. Such an enquiry would be not only useless in its practical result, but also illegal as declared by the Privy Council in 5 W.R.P.C. 69. The High Court, therefore, did not uphold the contention of the defendant that the lower appellate Court has committed an error in law in decreeing the julkur in dispute, to the special respondent, solely on the ground of prior possession and illegal dispossession without any proof of title, and dismissed the appeal, holding that such objection of the defendant was itself erroneous in law and that the decision of the Principal Sudder Ameen in favour of the plaintiff had not been shown to be erroneous at all. The decree of the first Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit was reversed by the lower appellate Court, and defendant on appeal raised the special objection that the khusrah butwarra-papers, relied on in the lower appellate Court were not admissible in evidence; but it was held that there having been many opportunities in both the lower Courts for the defendant to have objected to the admissibility of those papers, and no such objection having been there taken, it could not be permitted to be raised for the first time in the stage of special appeal. Defendant also objected that no decree can pass, admitting a lakheraj title as valid, without its being shown that the lakheraj land had been registered under Reg. XXXIX of 1793, but the High Court was of opinion that the case did not come within the provisions of Reg. XXXIX of 1793, inasmuch as there was no case of resumption or release of lakheraj lands. The present case was one of quite another description, viz., a question as to whether certain lands claimed as lakheraj lay within the share of one defendant or not. Thus, it does not apply to a suit for accounts where the plaintiff never was in receipt of rent or recognized by defendant to be entitled to it and the defendant never was his agent employed by him and never acted as his agent. JUMEER MUNDUL v. MOHIMA CHUNDER GHOSE, 5 W.R. Act X, Rul. 15.

(60)—Act X of 1859, s. 77, scope and applicability of—Determination of person who last received rents—Cases of conflict of title, s. 77 not applicable to.—In this suit for a kubooleat and a declaration of title to rents, the first Court held that plaintiff showed that his vendor was the last person who received rents and that, therefore, under s. 77 of Act X of 1859, plaintiff was entitled to a decree which was accordingly given to him. On appeal by the defendant, the Judge found that the plaintiff came in relying on the title of the rihts of his vendor who, actually, had no rights at all, and dismissed the suit of the plaintiff. On special appeal it was urged that the Judge had only to see, as under s. 77, whether the first Court was right or wrong in having held that plaintiff's vendor was the last person who collected the rents. The High Court held that since the pleadings showed a conflict of title and the Judge had found as a fact that plaintiff had no title, s. 77 was not the law to be applied to the case. (61)—Title, priority of—Purchase at a sale in execution of a landlord's claim for rent—Purchase in execution of a mortgage-decree of portions of the holding—Rent, right to claim—Encumbrance, setting aside of—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 167—Limitation—Notice served within a year from the date of confirmation of sale, if valid—Estoppel, conduct.—A purchaser at a sale in execution of the landlord's claim for rent acquires a title to the whole of the holding, preferential to that which a mortgagee, by his purchase in execution of his mortgage decree, acquires in portions of the holding. A purchaser of an entire durputni taluq, at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent made in a suit brought against the original durputnidars by the putnidar, acquires a good and preferential title to the whole taluq, over the purchaser in execution of a mortgage-decree obtained against some of the durputnidars, who were encumbrancers on the darputni to the extent of the shares covered by the mortgage encumbrances; and, on the basis of that title, the former can recover the full rents from the tenants of the taluq. (13 C.W.N. 413, F.) A person, who claims to hold encumbrances and disputed, in a previous litigation, the right of the purchaser of the entire holding under the sale for arrears of rent, and thus denied the right of the purchaser to issue notices to annul the encumbrances, involving the purchaser of the entire holding in litigation to prove his title, cannot, by reason of his having raised the dispute and caused the delay, in equity, be allowed subsequently to say that the title under which the purchaser claimed to issue the notice was perfected, for the purposes of s. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, on the date of his actual purchase and not on any subsequent date, such as the date of the confirmation of his title by the decision in the previous litigation. (62)—Act VIII of 1859, s. 2—Prior suit—Matters subsequent — Proprietary title under decree, effect of—Limitation.—Where a plaintiff standing on her proprietary title, which originated in a mortgage followed by purchase and which was affirmed by a decree, alleged against the defendant an obstruction and hindrance to the plaintiff's right caused by some resistance offered by the defendant to the plaintiff's procuring the proper entry in the revenue records of her name as proprietor, held, that the former adjudication between the parties could not affect the plaintiff's right in respect of matters which had arisen subsequent to it, and s. 2 of the Civ. Pro. Code could not apply to such a case. If a person fully possessed of and entitled to property brought a suit which resulted in the further confirmation of his title by a decree he would henceforward hold his property not under that decree above, but also under the original title affirmed by the decree. The title set up was long continued possession and holding of the lands in dispute as debutter lakheraj. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree, having proved possession of the land without payment of rent for 12 years. (66)—Title of vendor as between private individuals and as against Government—Land cleared and cultivated in Burma without payment of revenue—Sale of interest in such land.—S. 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, enacts that the seller shall be deemed to contract with the buyer that the interest which the seller proposes to transfer to the buyer subsists, and that he has power to transfer the same. Though this Act is not in force in Burma outside Rangoon, it is admitted by the advocates for both parties that the principle upon which this provision is based is applicable. In Burma it is constantly the practice for persons to clear and cultivate land, without paying revenue, and then to sell their interest in the land to others. If the purchaser knows the nature of the interest he is buying, he gets all that he bargained for. As between private individuals, plaintiff's vendor had a possessory title to the land and a better title than any other private person could then show. EDUMBA TAVAN v. (68)—Title, suit to establish, to attached property without previous application for removal of attachment.—There is nothing in the Civ. Pro. It has been ruled by one of the High Courts in India that such person might sue for damages for the wrongful attachment of such property without suing to establish the rights which he claimed thereto. (69)—Mortgage by father — Mortgagee dispossessed by sons—Claim title—Act VIII of 1859, ss. 229, 230.—B, a Hindu father, executed a zuripeshgi lease of his share in certain joint family property to K, who was put in possession thereof. R and S, the sons of B, brought a suit against their father to obtain a declaration of their right to hold their separate shares by partition of the family property. K intervened in that suit under s. 230 of Act VIII of 1859, setting up his mortgage and praying that his incumbrance might be recognized and maintained. The Court declined to go into the question of this mortgage, confined itself to the question between the plaintiffs and their father, and gave judgment for a certain share by partition, but thought proper to accompany that decree by a declaration that the plaintiff should get possession only of the property held, and in the same manner as held, by the father. In execution, the plaintiffs were put into actual possession of the whole of their share and K was dispossessed. Then K, under s. 230, applied to be restored to possession on the ground that he held the same under a good and valid mortgage from B. The sons disputed the validity of the mortgage. The Court below refused to enter into the question of right between the parties. Held, that the lower Court ought to have gone fully into the question of title, and decided all questions between the parties. Toda-Giras-Hak.

(1)—Its origin and history—Nature of such haks—Such haks if founded on contract with Government.—Toda-giras-hak had their origin in arbitrary exactions made by strong and powerful persons, who obtained the name of girasias, upon the village community. These arbitrary exactions were in some way commuted into fixed payments by the villagers, in consideration of which the girasias gave up their claim to make arbitrary exactions, and also undertook to defend the villagers against the exactions of others. Such annual payments, although originally exacted by the girasias from the village community in certain territories in the west of India by violence and wrong in the nature of black-mail, had, when those territories fell under British Rule, acquired by long usage a quasi legal character as customary annual payments. They were, as such, recognised by the British Government, which took upon itself the payment of such of them as were previously payable by villages paying revenue, and left the liability to pay such of them as were payable by the inam villages to fall on the inamdar. It will thus be seen that these haks have acquired the character of a right and have been recognised as a species of property, however unlawful their origin may have been. As to the contention that the present action was founded on contract, and that, if it was embraced by the Pensions Act, then all contracts for the payment of money by the Government must be held to be included by it, it was held that the Act applied only to grants of money in respect of, or in substitution for some right, privilege, perquisite or office, and that although, in some sense, it may be said that the arrangement made between the Government and the girasias were in the nature of contract, yet as that contract, if it were one, resulted in the abandonment, on the part of the girasias of their claim to make collection from the villagers, and in the allowance of money by the Government in lieu of them, such allowance fell within the operation of the Pensions Act. MAHARAVAL MOHAN SINGHJI v. THE GOVERNMENT OF BOMBAY, 5 B. 408, P.C.=8 I. A. 77=4 Sar. 230.

(2)—Toda garas—Collection by Government from villagers—Liability of Government to pay to original garasia or his representative.—Where the Government collected toda garas from the villages, it was bound to pay it back to the original garasia or his representative, if the hak was perpetual. Where the Government has been paying the toda garas collected by it to a garasia for a very long time continuously, it would be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the hak was perpetual. UMEDSANGJI v. THE COLLECTOR OF SURAT, 7 B. H.C.A.C. 50.

(3)—Tora garas hak payable by Government, sale of, in satisfaction of decree—Inalienability of allowance, onus on Government to prove.—This was an appeal from a decree of the Sudder Dewany Adawlut of Bombay, by which it had been decided that a certain annual payment, called a tora garas huk, was not by law capable of alienation and that the purchaser of such an interest at a judicial sale was not entitled either to have the sale enforced or to have his purchase money refunded to him by the individual who had received it. The appellant had presented a petition to the Judge of the Sudder Adawlut praying that the Collector might be ordered to enter his name in the registers as purchaser of the tora garas huk and to pay him the huk regularly or that the purchase money which he had already paid into Court might be refunded to him with interest. Order was made by which the petitioner, was left to file a suit in the Civil Court, and, under the circumstances, appellant instituted the present suit against the Collector and the present respondent. As against the Collector it prayed that the tora garas in question might be entered in the name of appellant, and as against the respondent, it prayed that in case the sale of the tora garas by the respondent be found improperly made; he might be ordered to refund the purchase money. The Judges of the zillah Court decided that the tora garas in question could not be enjoyed by any garasias, and that no decree could be made, either against the Collector or against the respondent. On appeal, the Sudder Court reversed the decree and decided in favour of the appellant and against the Collector. An application for review of the decree presented by the Collector had been granted. And the Court finally decided that the tora garas was not alienable, that the purchaser of it took nothing by his purchase, that the claim against the respondent must be thrown out, and that as the respondent could not be deemed to have guaranteed anything, appellant could not come upon him to reimburse the purchase money. It was the propriety of the above decree that the Judicial Committee had to consider. They were of opinion that it was not consistent with justice that the Government should be allowed to insist and that the Court should decide that the purchaser took nothing by his conveyance, and that he should not only lose all his purchase money, but pay all the costs which had been incurred in his attempt to obtain redress. The Government had full and distinct notice of all the proceedings which took place in this particular sale. The purchase-money was paid into Court and paid out to the creditor, and a conveyance of the property executed by the Judge of the Court to the appellant; the Collector, that is, the officer of the Government, standing by and acquiescing in the proceedings with full knowledge of the objection to the sale, if any objection existed. Their Lordships were also of opinion that the onus lay upon the Government to prove that there was something in the nature of thie payment, which made it incapable of alienation, and that the Government had failed to give such proof. SUMBHOOLOLL GIRDHURLOLL v. THE COLLECTOR OF SURAT, 4 W.R.P.C. 55=8 M.I.A. 1=1 Suther. 387=1 Sar. 713 [R., 4 B.H.C. 114, 7 B.H.C. 50, 21 W.R. 178=10 B H.C. 281, 5 B. 408, 15 C. 89, 13 M. 60, 28 B. 276.]

(4)—Execution of decree—Attachment and the sale of allowance — What interest in the allowance is attachcable—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 266—Bombay Act (VII of 1887), s. 5—Likely to become due—Interpretion.—A decree-holder in execution of his decree applied for the attachment and sale of a toda giras allowance which the judgment-debtor was entitled to receive periodically from the Government treasury, and which was to become payable to him during the twenty years following the application. The lower Courts held that the life-interest of the holder, computed at its valuation for twenty years, could be attached and sold in execution of the decree. Held, reversing the order, that it is clear from the language of s. 5, Bombay Act VII of 1887, that it is not the life-interest of the judgment-debtor in a toda giras allowance but something short of it that is allowed by the Act to be attached. The words "money likely to become due" must be restricted to the case where, for instanee, during the life time of the judgment-debtor, a sum of money is directed by the Collector to be paid to him on account of a toda giras allowance not immediately but on a date subsequent to the date of the order of direction, and the judgment-debtor dies before that date, and to other cases of a similar character. Under what circumstances money is likely to become due on account of a toda giras allowance is a question which cannot be answered exhaustively and must depend on the facts of each case as it arises. AMARASANG v. JETHALAL, 10 Bom. L. R. 1201=33 B. 258.

(5)—Tora garas hak—Alienabillity—Burden of proof—Bom. Act VII of 1863—"Lands".—The burden lies on the Government of proving that there is something in the nature of a tora garas payment which makes it incapable of alienation, and without such proof, Government receiving such sums is not entitled to say that it will not pay them to the alience of the person to whom, but for the alienation, they would be paid. A tora garas payment does not come within technical definition of "lands" given in s. 32 of Bom. Act VII of 1863, inasmuch as it is not a share of the revenue derivable by Government from the lands of a village. Whatever may have been the origin of these tora garas payments respecting which there has been a great variety of opinion, it seems certain that they formed no portion of the revenue realized by the British, or any previous Government from the occupants of lands, but that they were sums paid by the village communities and collected by the garasia by colour and on the strength of their own independent authority, and were wholly distinct from, and in addition to, the revenues due by the villagers to Government. And the fact that by an arrangement with the garasias, the Government has agreed to satisfy their claims from the public treasury, on the condition of their abstaining from making a direct levy on the villagers, does not alter the character of these payments, or transform them into a share of the Government revenue. A suit to recover sums due out of a tora garas hak, is not affected by s. 27 of Bom. Act VII of 1868. COLLECTOR, SURAT v. HEIRESSES OF KUVARBAI, 2 B.H.C. 239.

The lessee did not appear in person but sent a Kyfuet accounting for non-payment, whereupon the Magistrate issued a warrant for his arrest for disobedience to the order of the Court in not appearing pursuant to the summons. Held that non-payment of the rent due under the lease was not a criminal offence, and that the Magistrate had no power under the Crim. Pro. Code to arrest the prisoner for not appearing to the summons. A lessee of tolls is not a person employed in the management and collection of the tolls within the meaning of Act VIII of 1851; he is not liable to pay over the tolls when collected and to the punishment for embezzlement if he should appropriate them to his own use; he collects the tolls for his own use and pays the rent in consideration of which the tolls are made over to him for the term of his lease. However analogous the position of a farmer of tolls and a farmer of a ferry may be, Reg. VI of 1819 which applies to the former does not extend to the farmer of the tolls. A stipulation in a lease of tolls, to the effect that if the rent be not paid, it might be recovered in the mode prescribed for the recovery of money embezzled by native ministerial officers, is illegal and cannot be given effect to; and a Magistrate, as a lessor of tolls, has no right to reserve a remedy other than that provided by law. In the matter of BUNKOBEHARRY GHOSE, 11 W.R. 26.

(1)—Injuria sino damno—Failure to prove special damage.—If there be a right, and if there be an infringement of that right, it is not necessary to show that there has been any subsequent injury; and if the plaintiff's undoubted right has been invaded, he would be entitled to a remedy, whether any damage has accrued to him or not. The principle ordinarily applied to actions of tort is that the plaintiff is never precluded from recovering ordinary damages, by reason of his failing to prove the special damage he has laid, unless a special damage is the gist of the action. NGA MYAT HMWE v. NGA YI, U.B.R. 1906, Tort, 9. (10 M.I.A. 563, 11 M.I.A. 7, 6 I.A. 190, 11 W.R. 143, 25 W.R. 547, 20 C. 1, U.B.R. 1897--1901, II, 231, R.) [R. & F., 14 Bur. Tort—continued.

Possible obstruction, no special damage.—Plaintiffs, certain worshippers of St. Jacob's Church, sued for the removal of certain constructions made by the defendants, who represent the Church of the Holy Ghost, on a part of the public road in front of their church, on the ground that the new construction will obstruct the plaintiff's view of a curusady and their procession on the public roadway round the curusady. Held, that no special damage was proved and that the plaintiffs had no right of action. A possible obstruction to a procession would not be a special damage. KURUSU KOSTHA v. THOMMAI SAVARIMUTHU FERNAND SUTHAKI, 20 M.L.J. 367=6 Ind. Cas. 780=8 M.L.T. 131.

(3)—Action for defamation—Proof of special damage, whether necessary.—Appellant sued defendant-respondent for defamation alleging that the latter accused him in the hearing of other persons of stealing palm-leaves and firewood. The first Court decreed the suit awarding damages to appellant but the lower appellate Court reversed the decree on the ground that the question whether the plaintiff's feelings might have been hurt is not to the point, and before she could succeed it was for her to show that the conduct of defendant had affected her socially. Held, reversing the decree of the District Court and restoring that of the Township Court, though mere abusive and insulting language not amounting to defamation is not actionable yet where the insult is such as would cause substantial pain and annoyance to the person insulted an action for defamation lies and without proof of special damage. The true test of the right to maintain the suit should be whether the defamatory expressions were used at a time and under such circumstances as to induce in the person defamed reasonable apprehension that his reputation had been injured and to inflict on him the pain consequent on such a belief. The principle on which this rule is based would seem to apply also to an accused person, as it is essential to the administration of justice that those who are protecting their own interests should be under no apprehension of any proceedings from the opposite party. (7)—Tort—Negligence—Damages—Contributory negligence.—Where, in a suit for damages for injury to the plaintiff's wall, the lower Court found that the immediate cause of injury to the plaintiff's wall was not the flowing of water into the drain, but the stagnation of the water and sewage let into it by the plaintiff himself, held that the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief, as the damage was contributed to by his own acts and was not caused solely by any acts or omissions on the part of the defendants. (8)—Rule of speed limit in navigable channels—Contributing negligence—Bad right.—Where a speed limit has been fixed by notification for steam vessels navigating a navigable channel, the speed limit rule must be observed under all conditions of the tide. Before a vessel can be held in fault for a collision, negligence contributing to the accident, and not negligence merely, must be shown. Thus where a collision occurred and the vessel that was struck had not a proper and good light showing, and the collision would have been less likely if the vessel struck had a proper and good light showing, there is no contributory negligence, if the vessel in fault was not going at a rate within the speed limit and on a course which a cautions man would have taken. (9)—Action of tort against Secretary of State—What should ptaintiff prove—Liability of Government of India—Master and servant.—In an action of tort against the Secretary of State for India, the plaintiff to succeed must establish that the liability was one incurred on account of the Government of India; such liability, however, can be incurred by those alone in whom the governing of the country is vested. Before it can be said that a liability on account of the Government of India has been incurred by the Bombay Government as the result of the act or omission of the Chief Constable so as to be chargeable on the revenues, it is necessary to exclude those conditions which would afford a principal exemption from liability for the act of an agent. And it is settled law that where the duty to be performed is imposed by law and not by the will of the party employing the agent, the employer is not liable for the wrong

done by the agent in such employment. Hence, where a Chief Constable causes damage by an act done not in obedience to an order of the executive Government but in the performance of a statutory power vested in him by the Legislature (the Chief Constable being appointed not by the Bombay Government but by an officer clothed by the legislature in that behalf), when his action is not in any sense productive of benefit to the revenues or the Bombay Government nor is it a transaction out of which profit can be derived, and when there is no ratification or adoption of the act, no suit can lie against the Secretary of State to recover damages arising from such Act. Code, s. 586—Second appeal, maintainability of.*—Two suits of a small cause nature were instituted, against the Government, to recover certain monies alleged to have been wrongly made over by a Magistrate purporting to act under s. 517, Crim. Pro. Code. The Munsif gave a decree for plaintiffs, but, on appeal by the Government, the District Judge reversed the decree of the Munsif and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiffs, thereupon appealed to the High Court. Held, having regard to s. 586. Civ. Pro. Code, no second appeal lies in this case. For, the complaint is of the act of a Judicial Officer himself and, in consequence, does not fall within the exceptions to the second schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. Held, further, on the merits of the case, that the Government is not liable. The Magistrate was in such a position that, for all practical purposes, the Government had no control over him, did not authorize or adopt the tort complained of and gained no profit from it. The person to be sued is the person who has actually done the alleged wrongful act, who may or may not have a statutory or other defence. There is no reason why the Government should be made liable and not the man who actully got the money. MOTI LAL GHOSE v. The first Court found that the hundi was a forgery but decreed the claim against the widow only, absolving the other defendants. The Judge of the lower appellate Court held that either the hundi was a genuine instrument in which case only the drawer and acceptor were responsible, or the deceased Naib was guilty of embezzlement and his representative after his death could not be held civilly liable for loss accruing through that offence, unless it had been established against him in a criminal prosecution, and that therefore, on the action as brought by him, plaintiff could not succeed at all. The High Court however held that the plaintiff had a cause of action. She had, if she could prove her case, suffered a direct injury to the extent she alleged and was therefore entitled to redress. Plaintiff's Naib was dead and she was no longer bound to suspend her action for a civil remedy until she brought a complaint on the criminal charge. RANEE SURNOMOYEE v. (18)—Damages—Injury done by one animal to another—Proof required—Ferocity—Scienter.—In a country like this where there is no positive enactment on the subject and no authoritative ruling on the point which must be held necessarily to be binding, it is a question for consideration whether the principle which has been introduced into England by legislation in respect to sheep and cattle should not be adopted by the Courts as the rule of decision in cases of the present kind. The plaintiff-appellant's mare, while tethered out on the village common, was alleged to have been killed by the defendant-respondent's stallion biting and kicking it. The Court of first Instance, finding on the facts in favour of plaintiff-appellant, gave him a decree. In first appeal, the lower appellate Court, reversed this decree on the grounds that there was no proof that the stallion was ferocious and known as such to the owner. In second appeal, which lies where the original decree has been reversed, it was found that the proof that the defendant-respondent was the owner of the animal which caused the injury had broken down, so that the appeal had to be dismissed. (20)—Tort—Damages—Injury done by one animal to another—Proof required—Ferocity—Negligence.—A buffalo belonging to the plaintiff was gored to death in the cattle pastures by one alleged to belong to the defendant. The following were indicated by the Chief Court on appeal as among the principal points upon which enquiry and findings were probably needed in order to determine the questions of the defendant's asserted negligence and responsibility for its consequences :—(1) Was the place where the grazing occurred a place in which the parties had a common right of grazing? (2) Was the defendant's buffalo which (as alleged) did the mischief to the bull, and was it properly and according to recognized custom allowed to graze with the cattle of other people in such place? or ought it to have been kept tethered, as apparently it was at first? (3) Was there any special reason, such as a ferocious or quarrelsome disposition, or the particular season of the year, or such like, why the animal in question should not have been left at liberty to graze untethered? (4) Did the custom of the country and of cattlekeepers, or the circumstances of the case, require either party or both to take the precaution of having a herd in charge of their buffaloes, and was such precaution wrongly neglected in either instance. If so, what was the effect of such neglect? (5) Is there any rule of law, or custom of the country having the effect of law, which makes the owner of an animal doing injury to another liable only in case the animal causing the mischief is dangerous to his knowledge. (23)—Apprehension of injury to person and property by kicks and attacks of a horse—Infliction of spear wound in exercise of right of defence—Death of animal from effects of wound—Liability of defendant to pay damages for loss of animal.—A suit was brought to recover damages for the loss of a horse caused by a spear-wound inflicted by the defendant. The defence was, that the wound was caused in the exercise of the right of defence of person and property against the kicks and attacks of the animal. Held, if a horse attacks a man, the person attacked is fully justified in protecting himself or his property by such means "as he might, reasonably, in the circumstances, think necessary for the prevention of harm which he was not bound to suffer." The force used must not be out of proportion to the apparent exigencies of the occasion. The right of defence must not be abused as it so readily may be; but, if a person, who is acting on the defensive, uses only such force as he reasonably believes to be necessary, he is protected. In this case, the act of the defendant was such as any reasonably-minded man might have considered necessary under the circumstances, and he was fully justified in using the spear as he did in the protection of his person and property. There is no ground whatever for supposing that he acted with any other intention than to drive away the horse, or that he used any more force than he believed to be necessary to avert impending injury. Owners of vicious and dangerous animals are bound to keep such animals under restraint. If they neglect to do so, they must take the consequences. Held, the defence must prevail. TURNER v. Elephants belong to that class of animals which are dangerous and if a person keeps an animal belonging to a class which is dangerous, he takes the risk of any damage it may do. Such person must prevent it from doing injury, and it is immaterial whether he knows it to be dangerous or not. The absolute liability of a person for any harm done by his animal, independently of any intent or negligence on his part, does not depend on the manner in, or extent to, which such animals are employed, but upon the nature of the class o which such a nimals belong or the particular

The defendant sued H, for rent unpaid and got an ex parte decree against H, in execution of which he sold up the plaintiff's turbine. The plaintiff then sued the defendant for the value of the turbine: Held that the suit could not be considered as an action for tort on account of negligence, but that the defendant was accountable to plaintiff in damages, though his wrong-doing was unintentional, as on an action for conversion. The question of contributory negligence could only arise in the case of an action based on negligence. The plaintiff's neglect, in so far as it excused the defendant's wrong-doing, could only be taken into account in assessing damages, by requiring the plaintiff to prove strictly the damage suffered by him. On the question whether the plaintiff was estopped by his conduct from alleging the turbine to be his and whether he should be held to have represented it to belong to H, held that there was no representation by the plaintiff on which any reasonable man could hold that the turbine belonged to H, and that the plaintiff by omitting to notify the goods to be his could not be held to have intentionally permitted the defendant to believe the turbine to be H's, and that he was not, therefore, estopped from alleging it to be his. The Government in constructing a railway bridge over one of the rivers, conveyed the materials, trucks, etc., across the river by means other than the ferry leased to the plaintiffs, and, thereby, as averred by the plaintiffs, caused injury and loss to the plaintiffs. Held (1) that the suit must be considered as an action of tort and not a suit for a breach of contract, nor as a suit in the nature of a breach of contract; (2) also, that a grant of ferry is ordinarily from the point where the highway reaches the waters edge to the opposite bank; that, to create a disturbance of the rights of an ancient ferry-owner, there must be a carrying of passengers and merchandise from point to point in the line of the ancient ferry; and as the Government had not so carried passengers and merchandise on or near the line of way over which the plaintiffs had the right to convey men, merchandise, etc., there was no invasion of the plaintiff's right, and the plaintiff could have no right of action merely because the Government found it necessary to make a railway bridge across the river and near the line of way of the ferry of the plaintiff and for that purpose deposited its materials and workmen in the bed of the river by the most convenient way. that of the English law. In Book II, Ch. XXIII, Paragraph 3, of Stephen's Commentaries on Blackstone, it is said, in defining a watercourse as the right which a man may have to the benefit of the flow of a river or stream, that "it consists in having the course of the stream kept free from any interruption or disturbance to the prejudice of the proprietor, by the acts of persons from without and in parts not within his own territory,—whether consisting in a diversion of the water, or its obstruction, or pollution by offensive commixture." And in the Chapter on Torts to property in Broom's Commentaries, terms of the same kind are quoted from various cases, among the propositions quoted being the one that "a substantial interference with the bed of a stream, so as to increase or diminish the flow of water to the detriment of other riparian owners, is a thing actionable in itself." S. 26 of the Limitation Act speaks of the enjoyment of a water course, but it is obvious that it is enjoyment as an easement that is intended, for the section says "any other easement" and speaks of the enjoyment being "as an easement and as of right." S. 26, Limitation Act, 1877, does not apply to a suit io remove a dam across a natural stream as it is not one to establish an easement. MA HNIN NYO v. The factor that the claim is barred by limitation as against one will not in itself free the others from liability. Nephews inheriting property of their maternal uncle take the property as co-owners without benefit of survivorship, and they cannot be held, under the Mitakshara Law, to have formed, in respect of that property, a joint family separate from their father, of which the eldest brother, on attaining his majority, became the manager or karta; and the eldest brother has no power to grant a valid discharge in respect of debts due to his minor brother without the concurrence of the guardian, much less of a certificated guardian appointed by Court, of the property of such minor. When persons inheriting as co-owners have each of them distinct rights to a share, the concurrence of the others is not necessary to enable one of them to give a valid discharge for his special share. (27 M. 300, R.) Per Mookerjee, J.—Where several persons join in committing a tort, each is responsible for the injury sustained by their common act, and their liability is joint and several at the will of him to whom the wrong is done. He can sue any one or more of them at his election, and those who are sued cannot insist on having the others joined as defendants (3 C. 353, R.)

The rule that in actions for wrongs independent of contract, where several persons are entitled to sue in respect of a wrong done to them jointly, as for instance, in cases of injury to their joint property by trespass, conversion or negligence, they should in general all join as plaintiffs in the action, is not inflexible. (25 C. 285, 2 C. L J. 496, R.) When two persons have been damnified by the same tortuous act, and have, therefore, a joint cause of action, one is entitled to enforce his claim for damages, so far as he has been injuriously affected by the tort, although the claim of the other is barred by limitation. (25 C. 285, R.) In the case of a joint Mitakshara family, where a right is vested in all the members jointly, the managing member may, within the meaning of s. 8 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), give a discharge without the concurrence of the minor members of the family, and time may, therefore, run against all the members of the undivided family including the minor members thereof. (4 A. 512, 16 M. 436, 58 P.R. 1882, R.) Where on the death of a maternal uncle, his estate devolves by inheritance on his sister's sons, who at the time are undivided members of a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law, they take it as co-owners or tenants-in-common without benefit of survivorship. (27 M. 300, R.; 29 I.A. 156, 25 M. 678, Expl. & D.) As a general rule, where a joint right to sue arises out of a tort, one or some of the holders of such right cannot give a discharge without the concurrence of the others, unless they are all partners or executors or members of a joint Hindu family, the manager of which has implied authority to bind all the members by a discharge given by him. The test to be applied is whether it is the intention of the parties that each of the persons in whose favour the obligation is created is a creditor for the whole; if so, a payment to one liberates the debtors against all the creditors; if not, each is a creditor for his own share and cannot give a discharge for the whole obligation. (7 A. 313, 5 C.L.J. 270 = 34 C. 305, 25 A. 155, 1 N.L.R. 24, R.) The powers of a guardian appointed by the Court to take care of a minor's property cannot be nullified, and the minor's elder brother cannot give a discharge as regards the minor's share without the concurrence of such guardian. (1888 Bom. P.J. 141, 14 C. 50, R.) S. 8 of the Limitation Act applies only to cases where the joint creditors or claimants are persons whose substantive right is joint, that is, where more than one individual possesses the same identical substantive right; the section does not apply to persons whose rights are distinct and different, but who are permitted to enforce such separate rights by one judicial procees. Trade.

(1)—Taxes on trades in Ancient India—Muhtaraſa—Trade-tax—Zemindar's right to collect—Reg. XXV of 1802, s. 4—Reg. XXV of 1832.—The right of the sovereign power to collect taxes on trades and professions is of extreme antiquity in India, but these dues, though farmed out, were not exigible by the owners of land, as such, but by the sovereign. The zemindar of Karvetnagar has not the right of collecting the muhtaraſa or trade-tax from artizans in his Zemindari, delegated to him by Government, and the assigness of the Zemindar cannot legally exercise this right. Quære—Whether it was competent to Government to commit the collection of this branch of the revenue to Zemindars for their own benefit. (2)—Will—Executor—Trade of testator carried on by the executor — Directions of the testator to carry on the trade—Debts incurred in carrying on the trade—Liability of the executor is personal — Testator's trade assets also liable.—A testator by his will directed an executor of his to continue his business in cotton, cottonseed and cotton ginning, in order to perpetuate his name, so long as it could be carried on at a good profit; but if it appeared that the trade would suffer so as to destroy his (testator's) reputation, the executor was enjoined to stop it. The trust-trader, in conjunction with his co-executrix, carried on the business and employed therein the trade assets. The management resulted in heavy losses, to pay off which the executor obtained money by a mortgage executed by the co-executrix, to the defendant, of the ginning factory used in the business. The plaintiffs, the beneficiaries of the testator, who were also the executor's sons, sued the defendant for a declaration that the factory was not liable to be sold under the mortgage decree. Held, dismissing the suit, that the mortgage was by one member of the firm with the consent and informal co-operation of the undisclosed partner—the executor, who had the implied authority of the testator to deal with the factory in the ordinary course of business; and that therefore the mortgage was valid and binding on the executor or as principal. Held, also, that a mortgage by a trader under a testamentary trust, of the testator as factory, was referable to his implied authority as a trustee, and not to his position as executor. An executor carrying on the trade of his testator under a testamentary trust is liable personally to the trade creditors, and is entitled to use, as a trader, the trade assets of the testator. He does not violate his trust by carrying on the trade in conjunction with his executor who is not named as trade trustee. The trustee, though personally liable for the debts which he contracts in the course of the business, has a right to be paid out of the specific assets appropriated for that purpose and the trade creditors are not to be disappointed of payment so far as the assets so appropriated are concerned. Trade-mark.

(1)—Trade-mark, acquisition of—Use—Duration—Particular class of goods to which the trade mark is applied.—It is the adoption and use of a trade-mark which gives a title to it. As soon a trade-mark has been so employed in the market as to indicate to purchasers that the goods to which it is attached are the manufacture of a particular firm, it becomes to that extent the property of the firm. The actual length of time, it has been employed is not an important ingredient provided it has been used long enough to render it probable that a reputation in the market had been acquired. The acquisition of an exclusive right to a mark or name in connection with a particular article of commerce cannot entitle the owner of that right to prohibit the use by others of such mark or name in connection with goods of a totally different character. BADISCHE ANILINE, ETC. v. TEJPALL, 5 Bom. L.R. 1025.

(2)—Right to restrain another from using a particular name.—A dealer in, or a manufacturer of, a particular article, who adopts a name for that article, whether the name be a purely fancy name, or a descriptive name, cannot restrain another dealer from using the same name, simply on the ground that the article so named has acquired a reputation, even though it may be that the public have grown accustomed to buy the article in question only relying on the name and without examining the quality of the article. For a man to be entitled to restrain another from using a particular name with reference to a commodity, he must be in a position to show that the public have grown to associate that particular name with himself as the manufacturer of, or dealer in the article. MAHOMED ESUF v. RAJARATNAM PILLAI, 7 M.L.T. 55=5 Ind. Cas. 712=33 M. 402. (24 C. 364, 35 C. 311, 15 M.L.J. 45, R.)

(3)—Infringement of—Rights of manufacturer and importer of an article regarding a trade-mark.—Plaintiff sought a perpetual injunction to restrain defendants from importing or selling any watches similar in appearance to the watches imported by himself or having any design or mark, whatsoever, which may be calculated to deceive purchasers into the belief that such watches were the watches imported and sold by the plaintiff. The trade-mark on the watches was the trade-mark of the manufacturers, the exporters, and the plaintiff's connection with the watches was that of an importer and seller under a contract for exclusive supply in India. Held, that, as the plaintiff had failed to show that the value of the trade, which he carried on, was due to the reputation acquired by, and attaching to, the trade-mark, as a guarantee of importation by him, and not merely as a guarantee of manufacture by somebody else, and that the limitation of that trade-mark was an infringement of an exclusive right of his own, entitling him to ask for protection, he was not entitled to the injunction asked for. An importer can only protect a trade mark representing his own reputation and the advantages accruing therefrom

but not the trade-mark of another, a manufacturer or producer. He is not in the legal sense aggrieved at any use of the trade-mark which belongs not to himself but to the producer. Importers can only protect marks indicating importation by them. If their importation is not indicated by the marks but otherwise, as for instance by the style and name under which they trade as importers, they could not use to restrain the use of the marks, and could only sue if their trade name and style were deceitfully assumed by a rival. A trade-mark, which represents not the importer's reputation but the manufacturer's, is under the control and protection of the latter, not of the former. HEINIGER v. DROZ, 3 Bom. L.R. 1=25 B. 433.

(4)—Infringement of—Colourable imitation—Fraud.—To entitle the owner of a trade-mark to redress, although fraud is necessary, the fraud does not necessarily consist in an intention to deceive on the part of the defendants, but in an actual deception or in the creation of a probability of deception independently of any fraudulent intention. It is not necessary for relief in equity that proof should be given of persons having been actually deceived, and having bought goods with the defendants' mark, under the belief that they were of the manufacture of the plaintiffs provided that the Court be satisfied that the resemblance is such as would be likely to cause the one mark to be mistaken for the other. What one has to look at, in cases of colourable imitation of trade-marks, is not whether a critical and astute purchaser seeing the two labels side by side would be able to detect the difference, but whether the distinctive and characteristic symbol is the same in both cases so that one is likely to be taken for the other. It is immaterial whether there are slight differences which could be detected on a close scrutiny. Trade-marks appeal for the most part to the illiterate classes who are unable to read or would be unlikely to spell out the descriptions round the border. E. D. SASSOON v. D. L. MILLS COMPANY, 1 Bom. L. R. 291.

(5)—Infringement of—Colourable imitation misleading the public—Ignorant and unwary up-country purchaser—Likelihood of deception.—A trader has a right to use any marks he pleases, so long as they are not calculatad to mislead the public or infringe anybody's trade-mark. In order to ascertain whether a trade-mark is calculated to deceive purchasers into the belief that they are buying goods of one manufacturer, when they are not his goods, the Court may look at the two marks in question, with its own power of forming an opinion, accompanied by the evidence given in the case. In India, if the goods are despatched and sold up-country, the Court must also consider if the marks are calculated to deceive the incautious, ignorant or unwary up-country purchaser. The question in these cases is, not whether the mark complained of has deceived, but whether it is calculated to deceive. Per Sale, J.—A counterfeit trade-mark may be defined as a trade-mark, which is either designed and used with the intention of deceiving, or which, by reason of its resemblance to another pre-existing and already established mark, is calculated to deceive, apart from any dishonest intention. It lies upon the plaintiff to establish affirmatively that the marks of resemblance were accidental and not designed. If the plaintiff, having the opportunity, deliberately abstains from showing that the resemblance adopted by him was accidental and innocent, it necessarily follows that it was the result and out come of deliberate design and intention. If the Court, on the facts before it, must presume that the resemblance is not accidental, but intentional and designed, then, the imitation must have been designed with the object of deceiving. If the object was to deceive, then, the Court will presume as against the wrong doer, that the means employed to cause deception were calculated to effect that purpose. This is the effect of the ruling in John Smidt v. Reddaway. (32 C. 401, R.) It is only if the fraudulent design is negatived that it becomes material to enquire whether the resemblance between the two combinations of marks was calculated to deceive. Evidence of experts or men in the trade cannot be given to show whether or not a combination is such as is calculated to deceive the purchaser. It is a question entirely for the Judge. Evidence of facts, which may assist the Judge to come to a conclusion whether one mark is a colourable imitation of another, may be given. In a suit for slander of title, malice in law is not sufficient, i.e., it is not sufficient to show that the mark or combination of the plaintiff was falsely charged as a colourable imitation, without legal justification or excuse. Malice in fact must be proved. NEMI CHAND v. C. W. WALLACE, 11 C.W.N. 537 = 34 C. 495 = On appeal from 4 C.L. J. 268 = 10 C.W.N. 107. [Affirmed, 34 C. 511.]

(6)—Injunction—Plaintiff's label a colourable imitation of other's lables—Plaintiff's right of action.—A person who uses a label which is a deliberate combination of other registered labels with a view to represent and sell his wares as the wares of others, cannot be allowed to take out an injunction restraining some other person from imitating his label. ABDUL v. MAHAMADALI, 3 Bom. L.R. 220.

(8)—Counterfeit, resemblance, intentional or accidental — Expert-evidence, if admissible—Malice in law, not sufficient—Malice in fact to be proved—Sea Customs Act (VIII of 1878)—Merchandise Marks Act (IV of 1889), s. 19 (a) Collector of Customs, power to make enquiry—Detention of goods by Collector — Documents tendered de-bene-esse — Witness, refreshing memory by document, effect of.—A counterfeit trade-mark may be defined as a trade-mark which is either designed and used with the intention of deceiving or which, by reason of its resemblance to another pre-existing and already established mark, is calculated to deceive, apart from any dishonest intention. It lies upon the plaintiff to establish affirmatively that the marks of resemblance were accidental and not designed. If the plaintiff, having the opportunity, deliberately abstains from showing that the resemblance adopted by him was accidental and innocent, it necessarily follows that it was the result and outcome of deliberate design and intention. If the Court, on the facts before it, must presume that the resemblance is not accidental, but intentional and designed, then the imitation must have been designed with the object of deceiving. If the object was to deceive, then the Court will presume as against the wrong-doer, that the means employed to cause deception, were calculated to effect that purpose. This is the effect of the ruling in John Smidt v. Reddaway (32 C. 401, R.) It is only if the fraudulent design is negatived, that it becomes material to enquire whether the resemblance between the two combinations of marks, was calculated to deceive. Evidence of experts or men in the trade cannot be given to show whether or not a combination is such as is calculated to deceive the purchaser. It is a question entirely for the Judge. Evidence of facts, which may assist the Judge to come to a conclusion whether one mark is a colourable imitation of another, may be given. Malice in law is not sufficient, i.e., it is not sufficient to show that the mark or combination of the plaintiff was falsely charged as a colourable imitation, without legal justification or excuse. Malice in fact must be proved. The provisions of the Sea Customs Act (VIII of 1878) as amended by the Merchandise Marks Act (IV of 1889), make it quite clear that the Collector had no power to deal with the question raised by the defendants, when once it became apparent that the plaintiff desired to contest the defendant's claim. It was his duty then to have held his hand and to have obtained the goods on being properly indemnified, until the question was properly disposed of in a competent Civil Court. The enquiry which the Collector of Customs is to make under s. 19 of the Act must necessarily be of a most limited character, for, the Act does not empower him to summon witnesses or to take evidence. Documents tendered in an examination de bene esse are not required to be tendered again during the hearing. Where a witness during cross-examination is asked to refresh his memory by referring to a privileged document, he may be told that the consequence of his so referring to the document, would be to allow the other side to have a look at the document. NEMI CHAND v. WALLACE, 4 C. L.J. 268=10 C.W.N. 107.

(9)—Trade-mark—Infringement—Limitation (Act IX of 1908), s. 23—Continuing wrong—Registration of mark—Right to sue—Cause of action—Actual deception not necessary—Imitation of mark when an infringement of trade-mark—Third person allowed to use a similar mark—Damages—Actual damage not necessary to be proved.—The infringement of a trade-mark is a continuing wrong, and so long as the infringement continues, a fresh cause of action arises de die in diem. In India, a plaintiff can maintain a suit for infringement of trade-mark, even if he has not proved registration of his trade-mark. In a suit for infringement of trade-mark, it is not necessary to prove that any one has been actually deceived. It is sufficient if it is proved that the defendant contemplates committing or has threatened to commit an infringement. The question is not whether a purchaser has been deceived, but whether he is likely to be deceived. (34 C. 495=11 C.W.N. 537, 24 C. 364=1 C.W.N 281, R.; 55 P.R. 1902, D.) In deciding whether there has been an infringement of plaintiff's trade mark, the Court has to see whether the device used by the defendant is such a colourable imitation of the plaintiff's mark as would be calculated to deceive the ultimate purchaser. The question is not what would be the effect on brokers or large dealers, but whether the mark is calculated to deceive incautious, ignorant or unwary purchasers. (34 C. 495=11 C.W N. 537, 7 B. 584, F.) If, as the result of an arbitration, another trader has been allowed to use a trade-mark more closely resembling plaintiff's mark than that of defendant, that is not the reason why the defendant should not be restrained from using other marks calculated to deceive the public. For damages to be recovered for infringement of trade-mark, it is not necessary that special damage should be proved. It is sufficient to show that plaintiff's right has been invaded, in which case some damages, even if only nominal, will be given. ABDUL SALAM v. HAMID ULLAH, 166 P.W.R. 1912.

(10)—Property in—Remedy against infringement of—Registration of trade mark in England—Imitation—Addition of devices—Want of patent for speciality.—A trade-mark in India is a species of property in respect of which an injunction may issue, and although there is no special law regarding trade-marks as in England, plaintiff has his remedy under the Specific Relief Act. The provisions of s. 103 of the English Patents Designs and Trade Marks Act of 1883 (46 and 47 Vic., chap. 37), not having been extended to India, the registration of a trade-mark in England does not place the plaintiff in a better position than the defendant, unless possibly as regards long user. The colour and size of a label cannot be regarded as any constituent part of trade-mark. MUHAMMAD ISHAQ v. ALIF KHAN, 98 P.L.R. 1902=55 P. R. 1902.

(11)—Trade-mark—No system of registration in India—English law to be applied—Assignment of trade-mark, how effected—Good will also to be transferred.—In India there is no system of registration, nor is there any provision for a statutory title to a trade-mark; so the rights of the parties must be determined in accordance with the principles of the English Common Law. A trade-mark cannot be transferred in gross; that is, no trade-mark can be assigned except in connection with the good will of the business in which it has been used, or, in other words an assignment of good will must accompany or follow the transfer of a trade-mark. Consequently where a person merely takes an assignment of the trade-mark without an assignment of the good will, he acquires no title to the trade-mark. BRITISH AMERICAN TOBACCO CO., LD. v. MABOOB BUX, 7 Ind. Cas. 279.

(12)—Meaning of—Registration in India—Effect—Proof—Vendor of goods—Right to bring an action for infringement of.—A trade-mark means a mark used to denote that goods are the manufacture or merchandize of a particular individual Since there is no system of registration in India which gives a person a statutory title, it is necessary for a person, who brings an action for the infringement of a trade-mark, to establish that the mark, in respect of which he makes the claim, has acquired a reputation in connection with the goods that he sells. An action for the infringement of a trade-mark is maintainable, even though the person who brings the suit is not the manufacturer or selector of the goods, but is merely a vendee of them. Though no specific objection was taken on appeal to the form of the injunction ordered in the lower Court, which proceeded on the erroneous assumption that the goods sold by the plaintiff were prepared or manufactured by him, a variation must be introduced into the terms of the injunction, so as to fit in with the facts as they actually are established. JAWLA PRASAD v. MUNNA LAL SEROWJEE, 37 C. 204=5 Ind. Cas. 1000.

(13)—Suit for exclusive right to make use of certain trade description and for injunction—'Facing' similarity of—Evidence Act, s. 65—Opinion evidence, admissibility of—Registration of trade-marks in India.—The plaintiffs and the defendant were carrying on business as piece goods merchants at Madras. The plaintiffs complained that the defendant infringed their trade-mark on grey shirtings which they (plaintiffs) were importing from England. The plaintiffs claimed the exclusive right to the user of a combination of certain words, designs, letters and numbers, which constituted the 'facing' imprinted on their grey shirtings. It was proved that the plaintiffs were using this facing continuously, and without alteration since 1889. It was also proved that in, and prior to, 1889, there was no similar 'facing.' in use in Madras and that the goods bearing this 'facing' and sold by the plaintiffs, had acquired a large reputation and were known in the market as 'tulwa' or 'kuttee' shirting, the word 'kuttee' meaning sword. Plaintiffs claimed that their trade-mark consisted of the whole combination forming the facing on their grey shirtings. It was found that, since 1898, the defendant was, with the object of overthrowing the plaintiffs, effecting some change or other, in his facing from time to time with the result that, in the end, his facing came to be almost exactly similar to that of the plaintiffs, in the words, letters and figures, &c., except that the defendant had imprinted on his facing, scent bottles lying horizontally instead of swords lying in the same position on plaintiffs' facing. In short, the various marks used by the defendant constituted a colourable imitation of the plaintiffs' marks in every respect apart from the swords. The defendant's contention was that the plaintiffs' goods had been known as 'kuttee' or sword shirtings. This being so, he (defendant) could copy every portion of the plaintiffs' trade-mark except that which gave the special name to the cloth (i.e.) that he could copy every part of the combination of the plaintiffs' trade-mark, except the swords, from the use of which the plaintiffs' shirting had acquired the reputation of the 'sword' or 'kuttee' shirting and that as he (defendant) used scent bottles instead of swords on his facing, there was no infringement of the plaintiffs' trade-mark and therefore plaintiffs could not get the reliefs by way of injunction, &c., which they sought. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the injunction prayed for (Davies, J.—dissenting). Held unanimously, that evidence of opinion as to the probability of the purchaser being deceived or otherwise was not admissible. Per Davies, J.—The action was not upon a 'trade-mark' properly so called as there is no registration of trade mark in this country but that it was upon the right of an exclusive user of what might be more appropriately styled a 'trade description' which is recognised and protected under ss. 2, 4 and 6 of the Indian Merchandize Marks Act, 1889. To establish the user of a trade-mark, it is necessary for the claimant to show that it is by that particular marking his goods are known or recognized in the market or by the public. He must also show that the marks, as arranged by him, indicate origin of property as well as quality. This the plaintiffs failed to prove. Except as to four items, the plaintiffs did not make out their right of exclusive user and the defendant did not imitate any of those marks. Further, what the defendant copied, he was at liberty to copy and no one was likely to be deceived thereby into taking his goods as plaintiffs.' Benson, J.—There is no system of registering trade-marks in India. Every one may use any mark or combination of marks or symbols that he likes, unless some other person has, by user, acquired a reputation, which couples his name with the mark or combination of marks or symbols. In that case, the user acquires a property in the mark or combination, which the law will protect just as much as it were a registered trade-mark. To that extent, it becomes his exclusive property and 'no one else has a right to copy it, or even to appropriate any part of it, if, by such appropriation, unwary purchasers may be induced to believe that they are getting goods which were made by the firm, to whom the trade-mark belongs.' For several years previously, the plaintiffs had acquired by user a property in their facing. Moore, J.—The principle of law applicable to a case like the present is "that no man may canvass for custom falsely holding out his goods or business, whether by misleading description or by colourable imitation of known marks, packages, &c, as being the goods of or business of another. Its application is not excluded by showing that the style or words appropriated by the defendant are in themselves not false as he uses them or that the plaintiffs, if they succeed, will have a virtual monopoly in an exclusive designation which is not capable of registration as a trade-mark. The question is whether the defendant's action naturally tends to cause an ordinary dealer or purchaser to think he is dealing with the plaintiffs or buying the plaintiffs' goods. In the present case, there could be no doubt that the facing of the defendant would appear to the purchaser as virtually identical with that of the plaintiffs. Thre object of the defendant in adopting the facing he did must have been to cause an ordinary illiterate purchaser to think that he was buying the plaintiffs' goods. (6 M. 108, R.) Per Davies, Benson and Bhashyam Ayyangar, JJ.—No provision has been made by law for the registration of trade-marks in India and no order in Council has been issued under s. 104 of the Patents of Designs Trade Marks Act, 1883 (46 and 47 Vic., C. 57) applying to British India the provisions of s. 103 of the Act. So there is no system of registering trade marks in India. NOOROODEN SAHIB v. CHARLES SOWDEN, 15 M.L.J. 45, F.B. [R., 33 M. 402 =7 M.L.T. 55=5 Ind. Cas. 712.]

(14)—Exclusive user in India by importer—Infringement by importation and sale of articles with similar device—Effect of prior user of mark outside India.—Plaintiff, the importer of umbrellas with a certain trade mark, sued for an injunction restraining the defendant from importing and selling umbrellas with a trade mark having a similar device. The plaintiff contended that the trade-mark of the defendant was likely to deceive the public into a belief that the umbrellas sold by the defendant were those of the plaintiff. The defendant, while denying that the plaintiff had any right to the trade-mark claimed by him, contended that his trade-mark had been long used in Scotland, and that the public were not likely to be deceived. For the purpose of the suit it was taken for granted that the mark in question was used by the firm in Scotland before it was used by the plaintiff in India and that it had not been used in India by the Scotch firm before. Held, that the prior use in Scotland did not justify the Scotch firm and the defendant in saying that the plaintiff's user of the trade-mark was illegal or otherwise than an exclusive user. The protection which the law affords to traders using a trade-mark in this country would be seriously diminished if immunity from action were secured to rival traders who were able to prove that in some other quarter of the globe, some other trader had been in the habit of using the mark for a period longer than that alleged by the plaintiff. (15)—Importer— Violation of right.—If an importer have, from the mark or device he has used, become known in the market by a particular name, the adoption, by a rival trader, of any mark, which will cause his goods to bear the same name in the market, is a violation of the rights of the former. (16)—Use in foreign market—What constitutes—Right to a trade-mark—Abandonment.—Such possession and use of a trade-mark in one market as to constitute a right in it establishes in the proprietor an exclusive right to that trade-mark in any other market, though he may not have employed it in such other market. [Expl., 24 M. 163.] To constitute the ornaments employed, trade-marks, they must have been adopted as symbols devised to distinguish a particular class of goods as the goods of that class manufactured or selected by a particular manufacturer or merchant. (17)—Proper and quasi trade-mark—Exclusive right to marks on imported goods—Distinction between them.—Where, under the circumstances, the use or the imitation of the plaintiff's marks, on goods imported by him, by the defendants, would be calculated to deceive or mislead the public into the belief that they were purchasing goods imported by the plaintiff, the defendants ought to be restrained from such use or imitation - Per Garth, C.J. [R., 6 Bom. L R. 407.] No trader can complain against a rival trader in regard to any announcement he makes, concerning the goods he sells, so long as no statement is made which is untrue or calculated to mislead—Per Markby, J. When a trader specially selects and appropriates to himself, for the purpose of distinguishing his goods, any device, it is his trade-mark proper and no one else is allowed to use it. But if, without any such selection and appropriation, the trader's goods happen to bear some mark which has come to be associated by the public with the trader's name so that all goods with the mark are supposed to come from him, then also the law will not allow any one else to use it—Per Markby, J. [R., 24 C. 364=1 C. W. N. 281, 55 P. R. 1902=98 P. L. R. 1902, 15 M L. (18)—Partner's right to use the trade-mark—Rights of seller of goods to trade-mark—Manufacturer.—A trade-mark belonging to a firm would, in the absence of express provisions to the contrary, as part of the partnership assets, be available for any partner of that firm carrying on that business. In the absence of contract, a seller of goods has no exclusive right to a mark which merely denotes goods which he sells even though he may have designed the mark himself. Such a mark may be a mere quality-mark, indicating the reputation of the goods irrespective of the reputation of the seller. Obviously every trader being entitled, if not bound, to state truthfully the quality of the goods he sells, no one trader can restrain any other from exercising that right by a mark truthfully indicating quality. For neither of the two grounds for protection exist in such a case. His reputation is not injured and no deception is practised on the public. To give an exclusive right there must be something further. The mark must amount to a representation that the quality is wholly or in part due to and guaranteed by some person or persons concerned in, or connected with, the origin or history of the goods. In such cases the public are invited to rely on the reputation of the persons denoted, and no other person can without their authority, make such representation. And it is a question of evidence in each case whether there is false representation or not. VADILAL v. BURDITT & CO., 7 Bom.L. R.272 =30 B. 61.

(19)—Right of exclusive user, largely a question of fact—Its existence depending on evidence—Breach of right of exclusive user of name and number of trade-mark—Question of infringement—Combination of marks—Comparison not conclusive—Dissimilarity.—The question of the right to the exclusive user of a trade name, or trade number is largely, if not entirely, a question of fact, and the question whether it exists in any given case must depend upon whether the evidence in that case is sufficient to show such a connection or association between the name or the number and the firm which uses it, as to indicate to the ordinary purchasers in the market into whose hands the goods marked with the name or number may come that the goods are the goods of that particular firm. To entitle a person to an injunction, restraining the defendant from using any name or number as a trade-mark, he must possess the right of exclusive user of that name and number. Such a right, however, will not always entitle the owner to prevent others from using it under all circumstances. It is only when the use of that name or number deceives, or is reasonably likely to deceive the public, that it can be interfered with or prevented, and it is not sufficient to show that the number has acquired such a reputation that the people buy the goods by that number without examination of quality. To constitute an infringement it is not enough to show a mere possibility of deception. There must be a reasonable probability of purchasers being deceived. (3 C. 417, R.) [R., 25 B. 433 = 3 Bom. L.R. 1, 15 M L.J. 45.] A comparison of different combinations of marks side by side is not conclusive on the question of infringement, but the general dissimilarity of the marks is a matter which cannot be disregarded. (20)—Restraining use of trade-mark—Evidence of fraud.—The ground upon which a person is restrained from using another's trade mark is that he is gaining an advantage by the use of a particular trade-mark which is the property of another. It is not necessary to prove intentional fraud, or to show that persons have been actually deceived. It is sufficient if the Court be satisfied that the resemblance is such as would be likely to cause the one mark to be mistaken for the other. EWING v. with the trade-mark—Issues, raising of—Practice and procedure.—The plaintiffs, trading under the name and style of the West End Watch Co., imported watches into India as sole agents of a factory in Switzerland, established at St. Imier. Those watches had printed on their dials a device and the words "Berna" and "West End Watch Company." and they came to be known in the Indian market as the Berna watches. The factory at St. Imier subsequently passed into the hands of the defendants. A dispute having arisen between the plaintiffs and the defendants as to the quality of watches manufactured by the latter, the plaintiffs discontinued to send orders to the defendants, and began to import watches made at other factories. In the advertisements issued by the plaintiffs since that time as well as in answer to letters received by them from their constituents, they declared that, owing to deterioration in the making of the Berna Watches, they had discontinued to import them, and had substituted instead a new quality styled the Secular or the Railway Service. The defendants, who had incorporated themselves under the name and style of the Berna Watch Co., opened an office in Bombay, and issued a circular in which they referred to the plaintiffs as their agents who had sold six hundred thousand watches made at the St. Imier factory, and proclaimed that Berna & Co.'s watches would no longer be sold by the plaintiffs as their sole agents, as they had decided to deal directly themselves. The plaintiffs filed this suit to restrain the defendants from using and imitating various trade symbols alleged to belong to the plaintiffs, and from representing that the defendant's business was the business carried on by the plaintiffs: Held, on evidence, that, as the plaintiffs had, for three years preceding the suit, both in their dealings with the new factories and with their customers, evinced the intention to abandon the name 'Berna' as a quality mark for their watches, they could not claim any exclusive title to the use of that name either alone or in a trade-mark with a symbol. Held, further, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from representing that they were carrying on business of which the plaintiffs were the sole agents or were the successors in business of the plaintiffs. Where a trade-mark has up to the date of the suit been associated in the minds of the buyers in a particular country with a particular kind of commodity sold by the plaintiff, then, unless there is abandonment of the trade-mark by him, he is entitled to an injunction against any other person importing and selling the commodity under that name, notwithstanding that the plaintiff's name has, in addition to the word or trade-mark, always appeared on the article sold and is well-known to all dealers. The importer, who, by advertising and pushing the sale of goods under a particular mark, secures a wide popularity in relation to the goods sold by him, is entitled to the protection of the Court for that mark in the country of importation, even against the producer of the goods. The fact that the user of a word or mark always uses it in conjunction with his own name is not conclusive to show that the word or mark cannot be claimed as a trade-mark or that the user has waived his rights in it as a trade mark. There can be no property in a trade-mark in gross, apart from the goods of which it has become the symbol. Issues raised at a trial should be confined to questions of law arising on the pleadings and such questions of fact as it would be necessary for the Judge to frame for decision by the jury in a jury trial at nisi prius in England. The practice of raising a number of issues which do not state the main questions in the suit but only various subsidiary matters of fact upon which there is not agreement between the parties, deprecated THE WEST END WATCH CO. v. THE BERNA WATCH CO., 13 Bom. L R. 212

(23)—Passing off goods—Admissibility of evidence of intent—Intend to deceive.—The general principle applicable to passing off cases is that "nobody has the right to represent his goods as the goods of somebody else." In an action for an injunction to restrain the trade-mark, or mark if the defendant's goods on the face of them and having regard to the surrounding circumstances are calculated to deceive, evidence to prove the intention to deceive is inadmissible as being unnecessary the "rule being that a man must be taken to have intended the reasonable and natural consequences of his own acts." Where the defendant adopted a trade-mark identical with that of the plaintiff, which trade-mark was calculated to deceive and there was evidence to show, that some person was actually deceived, held, the plaintiff, was entitled to succeed without a necessity for him to prove an intention to deceive and to obtain an injunction. (24)—Limitation Act, 1908, art. 120.—The period of limitation in a suit for an injunction to restrain from the infringement of a trade-mark is prescribed by art. 120 of sch. II of the Indian Limitation Act (13 M. 445, R.) In the case of an infringement of a trade-mark the owner of the mark has a right to sue for every infringement of the mark until the mark becomes publ ci juris, that is to say, until the proprietor of it has in effect thrown open the use of it to the public by allowing his right to be so habitually infringed that the trade-mark no longer conveys to those who see it the impression that the goods to which it is attached are the manufacture of one manufacturer, or the goods of one person or firm who originally adopted the mark. articles, when another firm carries on the actual business with the articles supplied. The manufacturer may be interested in the success of the firm which de facto carries on the business, but this cannot put him in the shoes of the latter in vindicating the latter's right against wrong-doers. Where a statement by a plaintiff is not admitted by the defendant, the plaintiff, if he ignores the point, does so at his peril, for the defence puts him to prove his title. J. ULLMAN & CO. v. (1)—Device—Injunction — Fraud upon the public.—In cases where the plaintiff charges the defendants with palming off their own goods on the unwary public the foundation of the suit is misrepresentation to the public or deception of the public. There is no monopoly or exclusive right to the use of any words, letters, animals or devices such as exist in copyright or patents. There is no monopoly in names, etc., which merely indicate the quality or description of goods. Although no protection can be granted, if the devices merely indicate quality or description, yet such protection will be granted to the plaintiffs if they establish that the particular device indicates not merely the quality or description, but the plaintiff's manufacture. Words and devices which may indicate quality and description, may at the same time also indicate the plaintiff's manufacture. If once plaintiffs establish, that the particular device, be it words or letters or animals,—whatever that device may be—if the plaintiffs once establish that the device indicates the plaintiffs' manufacture, so that any one seeing that device upon the article would be justified in concluding that he is purchasing goods of the plaintiffs' manufacture, then this Court will protect the plaintiffs against not only the use of the particular device, but against any imitation of that device, which imitation is likely to cause deception to the public. (2)—Partnership—Dissolution—Right of a member to carry on the firm under the old name—Injunction.—Where two partners carry on business in partnership in some shops under the personal name of one of the partners, and at the dissolution of the partnership, one partner buys one shop and its good-will and the other partner buys the other shops and good-will thereof, nothing being said about the trade-name of the firm, the partner in whose name the shops were conducted before the dissolution, can restrain the other partner from carrying on business in the old name provided by so doing the latter exposes his former partner to any risk of liability Whether there will be any such risk is a matter to be decided having regard to the circumstances of each case. MORARJI v. MADONJI, 5 Bom. L.R. 545.

(3)—Dissolution of partnership—Good-will of the firm—Partner's right to use the name of the firm.—The prima facie rights of every man to use his own name in his trade cannot be questioned; and before restraining him in this, the Court should be clearly satisfied that the similarity to the assigned trade-name was such as its use would be under the peculiar circumstances a derogation from the grant. Where the partners at the time of dissolving the partnership make no stipulation about good-will, every one of the partners has a right to carry on the trade in the identical name under which the firm had traded prior to the dissolution; because the good-will of the business is an asset of the partnership, to which one member of the firm has no higher right than the other. (4)—Letters Patent High Court, cl. 13—Ground for transfer—Questions of English law—Parties—British subjects and residents of Calcutta.—Where a case was originally tried by a Zillah Judge, and on appeal to the High Court on its appellate side, the Judges of that Court remanded it to the Court below for a fresh trial, intimating that it was a proper case to be transferred under cl. 13 of the Letters Patent constituting the High Court; and where it appeared that questions of English law were involved in the case, that the witnesses and parties were chiefly British subjects, and the plaintiff, an officer of the High Court and resident in Calcutta, the Court ordered the case to be transferred for trial to the High Court's original jurisdiction. DOUCETT v. WISE, 1 Ind. Jur. N.S. 227.

(5)—Letters Patent, High Court, cl. 13—Power to transfer—Grounds for transfer—Inconvenience—Expense.—The 13th section of the Letters Patent (1865) of the High Court at Fort William gives the Court power to order a suit to be transferred for trial only where the transfer is agreed on by the parties, or for the purposes of justice; and in the absence of agreement, it must be made out that there will be inconvenience amounting to this, that, if the case be tried in the Court in which it was originally laid, the trial will be unsatisfactory. The mere fact that it would be less expensive to try the case in the High Court is not sufficient of itself for the Court to act upon and order the case to be transferred. OJOODERAM KHAN v. NOBINMONEY DOSSEE, 1 Ind. Jur. N.S. 396.

(6,—Letters Patent, High Court, cl. 13—Ground for transfer—Prejudice to interests of party.—A suit will not be removed from a Zillah Court in which it was instituted. to the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court, unless it be clearly shown that the interests of the party petitioning for such removal will be prejudiced by a non-removal. BORRODAILE v. GREGORY, Bourke, Ex. O.C. 1.

(7)—Letters Patent, cl. 13—Jurisdiction of High Court.—The words "to remove and try and determine any suit being or falling within the jurisdiction of any Court," have a wide signification. The Legislature did not mean them to be limited to any particular period or stage of the suit, conceived as a regular series of steps in procedure. After the commencement of the suit between parties, as long as the proceedings in the Court of first instance are in such a condition that one party is entitled to ask that Court to raise and judicially determine any question material to the final result of the suit, as between himself and the other party, so long is the suit in existence in the first Court and capable of being removed under cl. 13, in order that such question may be determined in the High Court. In the matter of THE DECREE NUMBERED SUITS 228, etc., IN THE COURT OF THE MUNSIFF OF DEBROGHUR, 7 B.L.R. 305.

(8)—Letters Patent, cl. 13—Transfer of suits.—In the absence of agreement of the parties, it must be made out that there will be inconvenience amounting to this, that if the case be tried in the Court in which it was originally laid the trial will be unsatisfactory; the mere fact that it would be less expensive to try the case in the High Court is not sufficient of itself for the Court to act upon and order the case to be transferred. (9)—Letters Patent, cl. 15—Ganjam and Vizagapatam Agency Courts Act (XXIV of 1839)—Suit pending in Agent's Court, High Court not competent to transfer to District Court—Agency Rule No. XXII, not ultra vires.—An order made by a single Judge of the High Court transferring a case from the file of the Agent to that of the District Judge of Vizagapatam and an order dismissing an application for review presented thereon are both appealable as "judgments" under art. 15 of the Letters Patent. The High Courts Act has no application to the Special Courts established by Act XXIV of 1839, and it, therefore, cannot be taken to authorize the High Court to transfer suits away from the Agency Court to the District Court. Even if the above article is applicable, there is yet the question whether a District Court can be said to be a Court "of equal or superior jurisdiction" to that of an Agent under Act XXIV of 1839, so as to justify a transfer to the District Court. The reservation of appellate power to the Governor-in-Council under Agency Rule XXII framed under the powers conferred by the Act is not ultra vires, and, even assuming it to be otherwise, it is rendered valid by s. 25 of the Indian Councils Act (24 and 25 Vict., Cap. 67). Nor would the circumstance that a case had been up in appeal on a preliminary point, and been remanded for a trial on the merits, limit the authority of the District Court to bring it on to his own file or to transfer it to the file of a Court other than that in which it was instituted. An omission on the part of the Judge to assign any reason for so transferring does not in any manner vitiate his proceedings. Where a Judge transfers a case to his own file, it is open to him to record new issues, and to call for further evidence as if the case had been originally instituted before him, and he is at liberty to go into the whole case except upon any question upon which there had been a judicial finding. It is objectionable to issue a commission for the examination of an absent witness without notice to the opposite party even though the wording of the law admit of a commission being issued without such notice. Where the defendant received the interest on Government promissory notes for the plaintiff and retained it for his own purposes, the plaintiff was entitled to claim interest on the interest received. Where evidence which

From the decision of that Court, an appeal was preferred to the District Court. From the decision of the District Court, a second appeal was preferred to the High Court. Held that the District Judge who heard the appeal not being the Judge who settled the issues, s. 17 of the Civil Courts Act had no application and the District Court had jurisdiction to hear the appeal. Held also that s. 191 (2) of Act XIV of 1882 clearly contemplated the transfer of a suit under s. 25 of the same Code after it had been part heard. After the suit had been heard by that Judge for some days, the defendant applied to the Court of the District Judge for transfer of the suit to another Court. The District Judge transferred the application to the Assistant Judge for disposal. The latter heard the application and ordered that the suit be transferred to the District Court of Poona for trial. The plaintiff objected that this order was without jurisdiction. Held (1) that it appeared from the Bombay Civil Courts Act (XIV of 1869) that an Assistant Judge was not a Judge having jurisdiction co-ordinate with that of the District Judge. He was, therefore, not a Judge of the District Court, which alone had jurisdiction to transfer the case under s. 24, Civ. Pro. Code, 1908. (2) That, under s. 24 of the Code, the District Court might withdraw any suit and try and dispose of it. Here the suit withdrawn was for a sum exceeding the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Assistant Judge, and he therefore could not try and dispose of it. He, therefore, was not a Judge of a District Court as contemplated by the section, which must be a Court of unlimited pecuniary jurisdiction. HAJI UMAR ABDUL RAHIMAN v. (33)—Civ.Pro.Code, 1882, s. 25—Suit pending on file of District Court—Transfer—Jurisdiction. S. 25 of the Civ. Pro. Code (1882), only enables a District Court to transfer a suit pending in a Court of first instance subordinate to itself, and not to transfer a suit which is pending in its own Court. A certain suit having been transferred from the Court of a Subordinate Judge to the District Court, was pending in the latter Court, when the defendant made an application to have the suit re-transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge. The District Judge granted the application. On appeal to the High Court, held, that the order of re-transfer must be discharged as having been made without jurisdiction. SAKHARAM v. (34)—S. 25, Civ.Pro.Code, 1882—Transfer, by District Judge, of case heard by him to Additional Judge, validity of—Jurisdiction of Additional Judge to hear the case — Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), s. 21 —'Functions,' assignment of his, by District Judge, — A District Judge heard an appeal and, after the conclusion of the argument, reserved judgment. Subsequently, the appellant presented a petition to the District Judge asking that an amin—not the one sent by the lower Court—might be sent to the locality in dispute for a fresh local investigation. An amin was then appointed, who held a local investigation and submitted a report. Several months after, the District Judge transferred the case to the Additional District Judge for disposal. The latter Officer heard the appeal and delivered judgment nearly a year later. The chief point that was urged in the High Court, on appellant's behalf, was that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to transfer the case for trial to the Additional District Judge, especially at the stage he did. Held, a District Judge has no inherent power to transfer a case either from his own file or from the file of an Officer under his administrative control. The power must be one conferred by the statute. Under s. 25, he is entitled to transfer a case, pending in a Court subordinate to him, to his own Court, but not to transfer a case pending in his own Court to some other Court subordinate to him. Nor does the Civil Courts Act entitle him to assign any particular case pending before him to an Additional Judge for disposal. He is authorized, under s. 21 of the Act, to assign to the Additional Judge the 'function' of receiving appeals. And he may perhaps assign to him the function of hearing any particular class of cases. But he cannot transfer a case which has been heard by him. Further, under the circumstances of the case, when fresh materials were afforded by the second amin's investigation, the District Judge should have determined the appeal one way or the other. Consequently, the order of transfer and the judgment of the Additional Judge were without jurisdiction. The result was that the judgment of the Additional Judge was set aside and the case remanded to the District Judge for being heard and decided by him, according to law. BIDYAMOYEE DEBYA CHOWDHRANI v. A District Judge having dismissed a suit as barred by limitation, the High Court on appeal set aside the finding and remanded the suit for trial by the District Judge. The latter referred certain matters to a Commissioner and, on receipt of the Commissioner's report, transferred the suit to the Subordinate Judge for disposal. The Subordinate Judge tried the case, and a first appeal having been preferred to the District Judge, the suit came on before the High Court on second appeal. Held that these proceedings were throughout most irregular. The effect of the irregular procedure was that, while the High Court decided one issue as a Court of first appeal and was able to interfere on points of fact as well as of law, it was now called upon to decide the remaining issue in second appeal. Everything that had been done in connection with the trial of the suit from the time that the report of the Commissioner was submitted to the District Judge was null and void as having been done without jurisdiction. It then is the duty of that Court to re-admit the suit and proceed to hear it on the merits. There is no power given to the Judge to transfer the case to any other Court. Even assuming that s. 25 of the Civ. Pro. When once a District Judge withdraws a suit to his own file for trial, he is not competent, under s. 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to re-transfer it to the Court from which the case had been withdrawn, but, he has inherent power to do so, when the interests of justice require it. Code. Therefore, when, by reason of a Small Cause Court ceasing to exist, a suit is transferred to another Court, the proceedings still continue to be Small Cause Court proceedings, and, for this purpose, the Court to which the transfer is made must be treated as if it was a Court of Small Causes having jurisdiction to hear the suit transferred to it. A suit was filed as a Small Cause suit in the Court of a Subordinate Judge invested with Small Cause powers. While the suit was pending, the Judge went on leave, and the Judge who was appointed to officiate for him had no Small Cause powers conferred on him. The District Judge made an order transferring this suit along with some others to the Court of the Munsif of the place, to be tried as a Munsif's case. The Munsif had Small Cause powers only up to Rs. 50, while the suit was for Rs. 69. (59)—Appeal—Remand to District Judge for local enquiry—Transfer by District Judge to Sub-Judge—Execution of decree—Transfer by District Judge from his own file—Jurisdiction—Act XVI of 1868, s. 19—Act VIII of 1859, s. 362.—Where a case has been previously heard by the High Court in appeal from an order passed by the District Judge, and that order having been found to be erroneous, the High Court directed him to make a local inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the mesne profits due to the decree-holder, it is the duty of the Judge to take up the case and dispose of it himself, in accordance with the instructions contained in the order of the High Court, and not to transfer it to a subordinate tribunal. Looking at the terms of s. 19 of Act XVI of 1868, and reading them with the provisions of s. 362 of Act VIII of 1859, it appears that it was not the intention of the Legislature to enable a District Judge to transfer from his own file cases of execution of decrees which had been passed by his Court, to the file of the Subordinate Judge for disposal, even though the sanction of the High Court is obtained for the transfer, inasmuch as that sanction cannot give jurisdiction in such a case to the Subordinate Judge. S. 24 of the C.P.C., does not apply to such cases. When the District Judge transfers a case under s. 24, on the application of a party, he should, before passing the order of transfer, give notice to the opposite party. If, however, the applicant invites the District Judge to transfer the case of his own motion, and the Judge orders the transfer without giving notice to the opposite party, the order of transfer is not liable to be set aside on the mere ground of want of notice, the irregularity not being material but only a defect of form. (62)—Act VIII of 1859, s. 6—Power of Zillah Judge—Bond under seal—Consideration—Purdahnusheen—Burden of proof.—The powers given to the Zillah Judge by s. 6 of the Civ. Pro. Further, the terms of the section are inapplicable to a suit which the subordinate Court has received by an order of remand from a Court to which the District Court is itself subordinate. But where the suit, although in form remanded by the High Court to the Subordinate Court, was in substance, as the order of the Privy Council shows, a new suit—as the direction therein given allowed the plaintiff to amend his plaint and the defendant was permitted to make any defence, and as, in accordance with these directions, an amended plaint and a further written statement were filed and fresh issues were framed. Held that, under these circumstances, the Judge was justified in regarding this as a new suit, and any irregularity in its transfer to his own Court must be regarded as waived by the subsequent proceedings of the parties themselves. of the Company, in their individual capacity and the Head Brewer, for an injunction to restrain the defendants from entering into certain transactions by way of purchase, or agreement to purchase, a certain business, or to invest money of the Company amounting to 2 or 3 lakhs of rupees in shares of the said business, when formed into a limited liability Company, and from disposing of the money or funds of the Company in pursuance of such transaction. A declaration that these transactions were ultra vires and not binding on the Company or its share-holders was also prayed for. Pending the hearing of the suit, the counsel for the plaintiff obtained an ad interim injunction from Court to restrain the defendants from further proceeding in the matter. The defendants appealed to the Chief Court against the grant of the temporary injunction. On the date fixed for the hearing of the appeal, it was seemingly agreed to, by the counsel of the parties, on the suggestion of the Court, that the original suit should be transferred to the Chief Court, so that the motion for the temporary injunction should be treated as the hearing of the suit, and the matter could be decided once for all by the Chief Court. The suit was accordingly transferred to the Chief Court. On the date of hearing of the case, the counsel did not agree to the hearing of the appeal and the suit together, as was suggested by Court; and the Court decided to deal with each separately, and in the ordinary course to dispose of the appeal in the first instance. It was contended for the appellants that the order granting the temporary injunction was bad in law, for, (1) it was passed without any affidavits and without the Court satisfying itself as to the correctness or otherwise of the facts put forward in the plaint, (2) notice should have been issued to the appellants against the grant of the injunction, and (3) the Company not being made a party to the suit, and the three Directors of the Company being impleaded as defendants in their individual capacity and not as Directors, the grant of injunction would be entirely futile. Held the contentions were valid. The appeal of the Head Brewer was granted on the ground that, in the capacity of a Head Brewer, he had, or could have had nothing to do with the transactions in question. The suit was retransferred to the District Court of Rawalpindi; for, the object of its transfer to the Chief Court was not attained. In the case of a suit for an injunction, it is practically impossible to grant a temporary injunction, without, to some extent, forming an opinion on the merits of the case, since it is the duty of the Judge to satisfy himself that the plaintiff has made out a prima facie case. (76)—Ss. 26,53. Civ. Pro Code 1882—Plaint, amendment of, under what circumstances, may be allowed—Mis-joinder of parties and causes of action —The claim, in this suit, was for the recovery of property, by right of survivorship of the plaintiffs, four members of an alleged Hindu undivided family, from the 1st defendant, the widow of a 5th undivided member deceased. In the plaint, the 4th plaintiff was alleged to have been adopted, by the 1st defendant, as son to her deceased husband but it contained no distinct prayer in favour of the adopted son alone as such. First defendant denied the adoption and contended that her husband had become divided from the plaintiffs. The lower Court, finding that the adoption was true, gave a decree in favour of the fourth plaintiff alone, without deciding the question of division or non-division and treating the plaint in effect, as amended into one by the fourth plaintiff only. On appeal, it was contended that this procedure was opposed to s. 53 of the Code and illegal. Approving of the course adopted by the lower Court, it was held that the procedure of the lower Court did not contravene s. 53 (c) of the Code, as the proviso to that section is intended only to prevent such amendments as might result in a new case being raised, involving the trial of issues essentially different from those arising under the pleadings as originally framed. Further, the omission to try the issue as to non-division could not, in any way, affect the first defendant, as the parties really interested in agitating that question were plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3, and as, by reason of the finding on the issue as to adoption, first defendant had no manner of right to retain possession of the properties in dispute on the case set up by her. If, in this case, the plaint had been framed in the alternative, Transfer in Fraud of Creditors.

See TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT, 1882, S. 53.

(1) Insolvency--Conveyance in fraud of creditors —Protection to bona fide transferee—Effect of want of due care in transferee.--Though s. 26 of Punjab Act IV of 1872, which avoids transfers in fraud of creditors and fraudulent preference of creditors by person in insolvent circumstances, makes no exception in favour of any class of transferees, that section must not be taken to operate to deprive innocent transferees of such protection as they may be equitably entitled to receive from a Court acting upon sound legal principles. Thus a transfer, which would otherwise be set aside as fraudulent, is entitled to protection, if it has been made bona fide and for valuable consideration to a person not having at the time of the transfer any notice that the transfer is fraudulent; to claim the benefit of the rule, valuable consideration, honesty, and due caution are necessary on the part of the transferee; if any one of them be wanting, he fails to establish a title to protection. B., who was in embarrassed circumstances, executed a deed of gift of certain houses to one Mrs. T. whom he afterwards married. Soon after, they both obtained a loan from a Bank of Rs. 8,000 on the following securities:—(1) a pro-note by B. payable in 12 months, (2) a usufructuary mortgage of the houses executed by B and Mrs. T., and (3) a fixed deposit of Rs. 8,000 in the name of Mrs. B. to be retained by the Bank until the loan of Rs. 8,000 was repaid. The Bank parted with no money, the money held in deposit being merely the money lent to Mrs. T. Within a year after this transaction, B was adjudged an insolvent, and a creditor applied to have the deed of mortgage in favour of the Bank to be set aside as invalid against creditors. Held that the deed was executed by B. and Mrs. T. fraudulently, and although the Bank manager had no actual knowledge that B. was insolvent or that his object was to defeat his creditors, the conduct of the Bank as represented by the manager was incautious and careless to the degree of recklessness, and not such as to give the Bank as between it and the creditors an equitable title to protection and preference. in possession by the managers, whether amounts to conveyance of transfer.—In this case, the manager of the defendant, partly with defendant's funds and partly with the money subscribed by the village, erected the building in question for the purposes of a school. He, however, never gave the property to the school, nor even acquiesced in the managers of the school entering upon it. They entered upon it as trespassers and, although he acquiesced in their having taken possession, he did not thereby convey any property in the school to the subscribers. It was held that, under the circumstances, the defendant was not bound to re-pay that portion of the money which he expended himself in building the house, nor was he bound to do anything more than return that portion of the funds which was subscribed by the village. (2)—Sale—Vendor out of possession—Suit by vendee for possession—Maintainability.—It has been the practice of the Courts in this country to give effect to sales made by persons out of possession, and to recognise the title of the purchaser to maintain a suit. AULOCK MONEE DOSSIA v. AULOCK MONEE DEBIA, 25 W.R. 48 [R., 25 W.R. 223.]

(5)—Sale—Consideration not paid—Vendor not in possession—Suit by vendee, if maintainable.—A purchaser of property, who pays nothing as consideration therefor, cannot maintain a suit for possession, where the vendor was not himself in possession. It would be against public policy to allow such a suit to be maintained BISHONATH DEY ROY v CHUNDER MOHUN DUTT BISWAS, 23 W.R. 165. [F., 25 W.R. 223; R, 2 B. 293.]

(6)—Vendor out of possession at time of sale—Purchaser's right to sue—Current of decisions—Reference to Full Bench.—There is no necessity to refer a question for the authoritative ruling of a Full Bench, when it is already concluded by a current of previous decisions according to which a purchaser who purchases property from a vendor who is out of possession at the time of sale, is entitled to bring a suit for the recovery of such property. BISSESSUR DOSS v. JOY KISHORE DOSS, 25 W.R. 223.

(7)—Vendor and purchaser—Vendor not in possession at time of sale—Right of vendee to sue for possession—Second appeal—Interference by High Court.—Where the person, who had been in possession and quiet enjoyment of property sold it to another, the latter was entitled to sue for the immediate possession of the property, though the vendor had not at the time of sale possession thereof. [Not F., 6 B. 380. (9)—Purchase of property—Disturbance of vendor's possession—Cause of action to vendee—Limitation.—Purchasers of property have a good right of suit where their vendors had been at one time in peaceable possession of the disputed property and were disturbed and possession taken from them within the period of limitation. NITTYANUND GOSSAIN v. SHAMA CHURN CHATTERJEE, 23 W.R. 163. [F., 25 W.R. 223.]

(10)—Contract—Champerty—Right to recover property based upon champertous transaction—Maintainability of suit—Assignment of property—Assignor not in possession—Right of assignee to recover possession from third party.—As champertous contracts are pernicious and detrimental to the best interests of the society, and contrary to public policy, an assignee cannot maintain a suit to recover possession of property under a contract of a highly champertous character. [R., 11 A. 57 = A.W.N. 1888, 296, 2 O.C. 149.] An assignee of property, whose assignor was not in possession of the property at the time when the assignment was made, can recover the property from the hands even of third persons, if he first shows that he would have a right to enforce specific performance of his contract against his assignor in case the property comes back to his hands BOODHUN SINGH v. MUSSAMUT LUTTEFUN, 22 W.R. 535. [D., 1 C. 297.]

(11)—Sale in execution—Rent decree—Sale of judgment-debtor's interest.—Where, in execution of a decree for rent, the Court advisedly only sold the right, and interest of one proprietor of certain property, then that right and interest alone was conveyed by the sale and not the right and interest of the other proprietors, notwithstanding the fact that the right and interest of these also was as much liable for the arrears of rent. LALLA SABIL CHAND v. GOODUR KHAN. 22 W. R., 187.

(12)—Execution-sale—Sale certificate—Right of suit.—Where, in an execution sale under a decree against K and D upon a debt due by D's father, only the rights and interests of K appeared to have been expressly passed, and the judgment-creditor took possession of the entire property without complaint from D, and, many years after D's death, her heirs sold a share of the property to the plaintiffs who sued for possession, held that the plaintiffs obtained no immediate right to the property by the conveyance from D's heirs. Quære.—Can the plaintiffs set up a right of suit? (13)—Sale in execution—Assignment—Possession.—Upon a sale in execution of a decree, the property in the thing sold passes to the purchaser, and there is nothing either in Hindu or English law which debars a third person from taking an assignment of such property from the auction-purchaser, albeit it had not been reduced into possession, GOBIND RAGUNATH v. GOBIND JAGOJI, 1 B. 500. [R., 2 B. 299, 6 B. 168, F.B.]

(14)—Agreement by father not to alienate ancestral property without son's consent—Sale of property in execution of decree against father, validity of.—The holder of a money decree obtained against a Mahomedan was held entitled to proceed in execution against ancestral property inherited by the judgment-debtor, notwithstanding a previous agreement entered into between the judgment-debtor and his son that the property could not be alienated without the son's consent. ELAHI BAKSH v. MUSSUMMAT JHANDI, 50 P.R. 1877.

(15)—Trees not cut passing with land—Sale of house and compound—Property in trees thereon transferred.—So long as trees standing on land have not been severed or cut, they are prima facie to be taken as passing with the the land on which they grow. A sale of a house or compound would comprise the trees therein, unless it could be shown that they had been specially exempted from the sale, or that they were the property of some person other than the seller. In the present case, the rights and interests of the owner of the house and ground, who was also the owner of the trees, were brought to sale on auction and sold without any express exception of the trees, and the High Court ruled that the sale transferred to the purchaser the rights and interests of the former owner in the said trees standing on the ground. which a man makes in his property before alienation of any part of it are palpable and manifest, and in their nature permanent changes in the disposition of the property, so that one part thereof becomes dependent on another, the purchaser of either part must take the land either burthened or benefited as the case may be by the qualities which the previous owner had undoubtedly the right to attach to it. On a severance of tenements, an easement, in its nature continuous, would pass by implication of law without any words of grant. AMUTOOL RUSSOOL v. (18)—Debt—Secret transfer of family property.—The heir and managing member of a family cannot pass off the property of the debtor, his father, to one member of the family, unknown to the creditor, and thus protect the estate by placing it in the hands of another member of the same family. (19)—Incumbrance—Priority—Estoppel.—In Upper Burma, before the extension of the Registration Regulation, a transfer of property to be binding upon persons not parties to the transaction must, probably, be accompanied with delivery, or change of possession, or made with publicity, or to the knowledge of the parties sought to be affected by it. The presumption from possession of property is prima facie ownership, and when a stranger sets up a claim to the ownership against persons professing to have been led to act upon the strength of that presumption, it would appear that the question is, whether there has been such conduct with respect to the ostensible ownership as to preclude the attempt to establish the existence of a different state of things, or whether the circumstances are such as to rebut the usual presumption and to show that the persons concerned must have known, or that they had the means, with the exercise of ordinary prudence of knowing the true position of affairs. In such matters the law operates by interposing the bar of estoppel for the protection of innocent persons, induced by the conduct of others to do or forbear what they would not otherwise have done or forborne. (20) — Transfer of immoveable property — Enquiry into title by transferee, nature of.—A filed a suit in 1907, for a declaration that he was the absolute owner of certain lands mortgaged by B to C. The lands were purchased by A in 1885, but they stood in the revenue registers in the name of B. C advanced money to B on the strength of the entry in the revenue register and of enquiries made in the Land Records Office, which showed that the land had stood in B's name for many years. He also acted on the recommendation of a Thugyi who was not the Thugyi for the circle in which the land was situate. Held that, in view of the provisions of s. 110 of the Evidence Act, and of the Limitation Act allowing twelve years for even an adult person entitled to property to bring a suit to recover possession of it, an enquiry into title which does not extend to enquiry as to actual possession of the property for at least twelve years cannot be said to be such an enquiry as a reasonable and prudent man should or would make. A mortgagee as well as any other transferee of immoveable property cannot safely take a transfer of such property, unless he enquires into the title of the person or persons who propose to transfer to him. RAMAN CHETTY v. PO SON, 5 L.B.R. 125. (11 B.L.R.P.C. 46, R.)

(21)—Decree with option of purchase—Right of pre-emption—Hypothecation by pre-emptor—Defective title.—The property hypothecated to the plaintiff was not at the time of hypothecation the absolute property of the judgment-debtor, at her disposal, or under her control, or possessed by her under an indefeasible title. She had merely obtained a conditional decree declaring her right of pre-emption and giving her the option of purchase within a certain time, but she did not enforce her right. She allowed the appeal in the pre emption suit to go against her; the sale and transfer consequently of the property to her was never perfected and her title never actually vested in it. The hypothecation was, therefore, incomplete and insufficient to create a valid and perfect lien in the plaintiff's favour enforceable in law against the actual possessor. HERCHUND SINGH v. RAM SINGH, 1 Agra 286.

(22)—Transfer and re-transfer of tenant right in Sambalpur District - Family arrangement—Right of gaontia to interfere.—Where with the consent of a gaontia a tenant transferred his holding to his son-in-law and subsequently the latter re-transferred it to his father-in-law without such consent, neither of them losing touch with the land, the gaontia could not be permitted to interfere with such family arrangements. (23)—Sale—Documentary evidence whether necessary.—Two persons who had originally purchased a house admitted a third party (the defendant) to an equal share of the premises on payment of a third of the original sale price. The house was afterwards divided into three shares one of which was assigned to the defendant. The plaintiff who was one of the two original purchasers sued for a moiety of the premises, but his suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance. The Zillah Judge reversed the decision on appeal, holding that in the absence of a deed of sale or some written agreement, it must be concluded that the defendant continued in occupation of a part of the premises with the assent of the two original joint purchasers. Held on second appeal that the opinion of the lower appellate Court that a sale cannot be made or proved without documentary evidence, was erroneous. MUSSUMAT ROOKHO v. MADHO DASS BYRAGEE, 1 N.W.P. 59.

(24)—Restrictions on transfers imposed by Legislature, effect of — Restrictions against transfer imposed by settlement decree, effect of—Restrictions for benefit of superior proprietor—Transferor's right to plead that the transfer is void.—There is an essential difference between restrictions on transfers imposed by the Legislature and those imposed by a Court or decree. The general policy of the Law is to promote the free alienation and circulation of property and to discourage the introduction of restrictions calculated to interfere with the fulfilment of these objects. But there are cases in which, for the protection of particular interests, it is deemed expedient to depart from this general principle and to fetter the privilege of free alienation. In such cases the prohibition against transfer, being founded upon considerations of public interest, must be treated as absolute. But no such force can be attributed to a restriction which has its origin in an agreement of parties or a decree of Court. Held that, in settlement decrees, where a condition against alienation is inserted, it is for the benefit of the superior proprietor only, and it is therefore not competent to the transferor of an interest conferred by such a decree, in a suit between himself and the transferee, to raise the plea that the transfer is void. WAZIR MOHAMMAD v. HAR PERSHAD, 15 O.C. 67. (2 O.C. 255, 14 O.C. 144, R.)

(25)—Transfer for illegal purpose—Illegal purpose never carried out—Right of vendor or his heirs to recover property transferred—Condition for exercise of right—Burden of proof in such a case—Trusts Act, 1882.—Where certain owners of property transferred it for the illegal purpose of defeating creditors, which purpose was never carried into execution: Held that the vendor could not recover the property from the vendee in possession, without proving that the fraudulent purpose of the parties to the sale was never carried out; and that the vendor's heirs were in no better position than the vendor. The words of s. 84 of the Trusts Act, 1882, clearly indicate that it is for the plaintiffs to make out that the fraud never got beyond the state of intention, and, in the present case, the defendant having the benefit of possession, the maxim "in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis" applies. RAGHO ATMARAM v. PURSHOTAM JAIRAM. 4 N.L.R. 26. (20 M. 323, 23 C. 460, R.) [R., 5 N.L.R. 146.]

(27)—Fraudulent transfer—Transfer to defraud creditors—No change of possession—No creditors defrauded—Right of transferor to obtain declaration of his right as owner.—Where a transfer of property was a mere device to shield the property from creditors and the transferor successfully defeated his creditors thereby, he could not be permitted to come and ask the assistance of the Court to recover his property. But if, on the other hand, there was no change of possession in pursuance of the fraudulent transfer and no creditors were in fact defeated there is nothing to prevent the transferor from obtaining a declaratory decree to that effect that he is the real owner of the property and his rights have not been effected by the transfer deed. (28)—Sale before T. P. Act came into force—No covenant for title—Eviction of purchaser—Right of purchaser to claim refund of purchase money.—As the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act cannot apply to sales executed before the Act came into force in the absence of a covenant for title the purchaser of a property under a sale executed before the Act came into force cannot recover the purchase money on being evicted from the property. Further a purchaser, who was for some years in possession of the property purchased by him, cannot, on being evicted from the property thereafter claim a refund of the purchase money as money had and received to his use as on a total failure of consideration. RAMLAL MOHANLAL v. JAWAHARAMAL, 1 C P.L.R, 178.

(29)—Assignment of Indigo factory—Liability of assignee—Debt—Dena Pawna contract to take over—Remand.—If a trader or other person in this country assigns his stock-in-trade or effects to another, and such other person enters into a contract with the former to pay the debts of the concern or a certain portion of such debts, the contract and assignment create a liability to the creditors, in whose favour the assignment is made, which they may enforce by suit. An assignment of the stock-in-trade under such circumstances cannot be defeated by the creditors, nor can anything that takes place between the assignor and the assignee affect the right of the creditors as against the original debtor. The creditors cannot compel the assignee to pay any debt, which, as between himself and the assignor, he is not bound to pay, and the creditor is not bound to elect between the original debtor and assignee, but may look to either or both for payment, the assignee being sued as a co-defendant with the original debtor, there being nothing to prevent the joinder of parties as co-defendants whose liability is not strictly joint. A person covenanting can obtain relief from the express terms of his contract, if he can show that it was a mistake, and that the actual contract was to pay something less than was expressed in the writing. Ordinarily the purchaser of a factory will not be liable for the debt unless by express agreement. Where any debt is a lien against particular property, it must be enforced by a suit to declare such property liable, and to obtain payment for it, and not by an ordinary action for debt against the person who has taken the property subject to the debt. The case was remanded by a majority of the Court to try the nature of the real agreement between the assignor and assignee with reference to the debt. Steer, J., and Seton-Karr, J., dissenting objected to the remand on the ground that, in contracting to take over the dena-powna of the factory and publishing the same by the act of registry, the assignee made himself liable for all the bona fide debts of the factory, and that the private agreement between the assignor and the assignee was of no force. J., that the deed conferred an absolute estate heritable according to law, to which the law annexes a power of transfer, and that the stipulation against alienation by the transferee, or against sale in execution of decrees against him, was void with reference to the provisions of s. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act, and that the property could be sold in execution of a decree obtained against the transferee's heirs on a mortgage executed by him. Per Mahmood, J. —S. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act had no application to the case, which was one of succession or inheritance governed by s. 24 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act; and the case had to be decided with reference to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, to which, in the matter of transfer of property, effect was given by s. 10 of Act IV of 1882. And as the restraints on the alienation of the absolute estate which the deed conferred, were against the policy of the law, they could not be given effect to. BHAIRO v. (42)—Ss. 2, cl. (b), and 36—Execution sale —Rent.—By s. 2, cl. (26 M. 540, D.) Obiter. —It may be that the tenants were wrong in paying the first defendant the rents in advance, and that the plaintiff has a claim against the tenants for that overpayment, and that the latter may be entliled to be recouped by the first defendant. (47)—Ss. 2, 67, 99—Mortgage—Suit pending when Act came into force.—It was not the intention of s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act to render ineffectual suits instituted and decree made under the procedure in force before the Act was passed. The plaintiff in this case instituted a suit for sale on his mortgage on the 21st June, 1881, and after its institution and while it was pending, the T.P. Act came into force. He obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property. In execution of the decree, the judgment-debtor objected that, with reference to the terms of s. 99 of the T.P. Act, the decree-holder was not entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit under s. 67 of the Act. Held that the objection was not valid, as the decree-holder had acquired under the decree rights, which are, under s. 2 of the Act, not affected by the provisions of s. 99. (56)—S. 3—Notice, registration when amounts to.—Having regard to the statutes applicable in this country, the question, whether or not registration is notice, is to be treated as not one of law, but of fact, and, as each case arises, it should be determined whether, in that individual case, the omission to search the registry taken together with the other facts, amounts to such gross negligence as to attract the consequence which results from notice. (57)—S. 3—Assignability of executory contract.—The rule in this country as to the assignability of an executory contract for the purchase and sale of goods is that the benefit of such a contract can be assigned, understanding, by benefit the beneficial interest under the contract and the right to enforce it. This rule is subject to certain qualifications, viz., (1) that the benefit is not coupled with a liability, and (2) that the nature of the contract has not been affected by personal considerations. Such a contract falls within the rule which is in existence and in force in this country as to assignment of contracts. Such a contract though perhaps contingent in character, comes within the definition of actionable claim in the Transfer of Property Act, s. 3. If he had ascertained that that mortgage had been made, it would have put him on further inquiry, which he was bound to have made, as to who was the person who was at the time of the suit interested in the property. The prior mortgagee, therefore, having constructive notice by reason of the registration of the subsequent incumbrance, he should comply with the provisions of s. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, which makes it compulsory that in a suit relating to a mortgage, all persons, of whose interest in the property mortgaged the plaintiff has had notice, should be joined as parties. The object and effect of the section is to compel a person suing on a mortgage to bring into one suit, so far as he has notice of their interests, all persons interested in the property, so that the rights and interests of the different persons interested in the mortgaged property might be ascertained protected and dealt with, in a single suit instead of in several suits. Thepr ovisions of s. 6, Tr.P. Act, are only intended to apply to cases of a mere hope or chance of succession which may be defeated by the act of some person having the present disposal of the property. It can scarcely be said that a right of a Hindu reversioner is a mere possibility. It is an interest which is capable of being protected by Court. So, the interest of such a person expectant on the death of a Hindu widow does not fall within the purview of cl. (a) s. 6 of the Act. Law sanctions the assignment of such interest. [Overrul-d, 29 C. 355; R., 30 B. 304 =7 Bom. L.R. 742, 9 C.L.J. 50, 10 C.L.J. 263=3 Ind. P. Act, s. 6 (a) as being transfer of an expectant interest in property. A representative means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person, and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of a deceased person. Hence, a creditor has a right to sue the representatives of his deceased debtor and of obtaining a decree against them, if he can prove that there are assets of which they may become possessed, even though it is not proved that assets have come into their hands. Where an executor obtained probate for administration of the estate of a deceased person, and executed an administration bond with two sureties, whereby an inventory was to be exhibited within a certain time, but died within six years of the date of a suit against the sureties, held, that the suit was not time-barred, as time did not begin to run against the plaintiff until the death of the executor KANTEE CHANDRA MUKERJI v. In a suit brought to specifically enforce the agreement, the burden of proving that the plaintiff was ready to perform his part of the contract, lies upon him. testamentary disposition, not transferable. — On the 27th July, 1882, C executed and registered a document, which he called a 'Will' in which, after reciting that he was about 57 years of age and that it was desirable to arrange for the succession of his property after his death, be agreed (ikrar kartahun) and recorded that R, his nephew, who was a half sharer, should own and possess all his property (8 annas share in two villages) after his death, with full powers of sale and transfer, but without any power to interfere with it during his lifetime. It also declared that if C's wife survived him, R should maintain and obey her and if he failed to do so, she would retain all the property and the document would become null and void. On the same date, R executed and registered a deed by which in consideration of C's deed he agreed to make no claim to C's property and to obey him and his wife, but that if he failed to comply with this condition, he would have no right to the property. On the 6th November, 1903, C and his wife transferred, by a deed of gift, the greater part of one of the two villages in favour of their sons-in-law and grandson. On the 9th September, 1903, R executed a deed by which he sold to P a 4 annas out of 8-annas share in both the villages and also the half of whatever property they might recover in a suit instituted by them jointly on the deed executed by C on the 27th July, 1882. R and P accordingly instituted a suit for a declaration that C had no power, to transfer the property specified in the deed of 27th July, 1882, and for the cancellation of the deed of gift in favour of C's relatives, or in the alternative for a decree for actual possession of 8-annas share in the villages. R's son was also made a defendant on his alleging that he and his father were members of a joint Hindu family. The principal pleas of the defendants were that the suit was barred by limitation and that R having dealt with the property in contravention of the condition of C's deed of the 27th July, 1882, that deed became null and void. The suit was dismissed and P appealed to the extent of his share. Held (per Scott, C.J.) that the property in suit was not the joint property of C and R after the 27th July, 1882, and that C having been in adverse possession of the property in suit since 1882, the suit was barred by limitation. A document does not necessarily become a will because the person executing it calls it one and in order to determine the effect of that document its terms must be considered. Held therefore, that having regard to the terms of the deed executed by C on the 27th July, 1882, it must be held to be a will and that C had power to revoke it. Held (per Chamier, A. J. C.) that contracts to make testamentary disposition are valid; but under s. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act the person in whose favour such a contract exists cannot transfer his supposed rights under the contract to a third person and such a third person cannot, on the strength of such transfer sue for a declaration of those rights. (95)—S. 6 (a)—Widow suing for declaration of her absolute ownership under husband's will —Alleged reversioners entering into razinamah acknowledging her absolute rights—Subsequent release by such reversioners—Whether release anything more than agreement not to disturb—Whether compromise a transfer of a spes successionis.—As a right must always be on the one side or the other, the fact that the right is on his side is not by itself sufficient for a party to set aside a compromise entered into by him on the supposition of a doubtful right. There is nothing illegal in a Hindu widow acquiring full ownership in any property under a will; and a razinamah or decree recognizing the right is, therefore, not illegal. A Hindu widow brought a suit, as the sole owner of her husband's property under his will, against her husband's brother and some others, who were executors under the will, for a declaration that she had become solely entitled to the possession of the property and for other reliefs. A razinamah was entered into by which the suit property was acknowledged to be the absolute property of the widow in accordance with the terms of the will. A decree was passed in accordance with the terms of the razinamah, and a deed of release was executed by the reversioners. A suit was brought to recover these properties by the son of the testator's brother, as reversioner, alleging that the razinamah was invalid for misrepresentaton and coercion. Held, that the acceptance of the release deed was not an acknowledgment of the existence of any right in the releasor, but amounted only to an agreement (30 M. 256, 24 M. 265, 26 M. 31, 28 M. 84, D.) not to disturb the widow in the enjoyment of the property absolutely and that there was nothing to countenance the view that the razinamah and the release should be treated as effecting a transfer of only a chance of succession or spes successionis to the widow, which was incapable of transfer by virtue of s. 6 (a), Transfer of Property Act, and, therefore, illegal and invalid. Pro. Code, ss.* 274, 503—Court's power to appoint receiver.—In a suit instituted under s. 67, Transfer of Property Act, for sale of the mortgaged property against 5 defendants the then zemindar of Ammayanaikanor and 4 members of his family who stood in the line of succession to the zemindari, the consent decree, which was sought to be executed, provided that the decree-debt should be paid off by instalments, that, in default, defendants Nos. 1 to 5 shall pay the balance outstanding, that the mortgaged property, including the zemindari then in possession of the first defendant and to which the other defendants are entitled, shall stand liable, and that, in default, the plaintiff shall be at liberty to proceed against, and realise, the said amount with interest as provided in the decree by precept of Court from defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and the mortgaged properties. The decree, further, provided that, if the razinama amount should not be paid off in the life-time of the first defendant and he should be succeeded by a person, who was not a party to the suit, and such successor should object to pay the balance, the balance with interest should be paid by whichever of defendants Nos. 2 to 5 should succeed to the zemindari, at whatever period, as soon as he should so succeed, and that, in default, the plaintiff should be at liberty to proceed against the remaining defendants in accordance with law and that, until the whole amount is to be realised, the mortgaged properties and defendants Nos. 1 to 5 should stand liable. The first defendant was the zemindar then in possession, but the member of the family next in succession, who subsequently succeeded, had not joined in the mortgage and was not a party to the above suit. The second defendant succeeded the first defendant. The decree-holder filed an execution petition against defendants 2 to 5 in the suit praying for the sale of the mortgaged property and the appointment of a receiver pending sale. Held, that the provisions as to the event of the razinamah amount not being paid in the life time of the first defendant, were inserted with the object of keeping alive the right to execute the decree against defendants Nos. 2 to 5, in the event of none of them succeeding until further execution would, but for such provisions, have become impossible; and that the words "realise by precept of Court from the mortgaged properties" include a power to sell the zemindari, so far as it might lawfully be sold and, therefore, clearly a power to sell in default of the life-interest of the first defendant, the zemindar then in possession. As to the succeeding life-interests of the other defendants in the zemindari, it was held that the decree does not give any power to sell such life-interests until they take effect in possession; that the interests, which defendants Nos. 2 to 5 have purported to transfer, would be in the nature of a mere chance of succession within the prohibition in s. 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act; and that, as s. 6 (a) renders such transfers unlawful on grounds of public policy, the Courts cannot allow them to be effected by means of consent decrees. (8 Bom. L.R. 781, Appr.; 18 M. 291, 10 A. 272, 8 Bom. L.R 813, 26 M. 31, 8 I. A. 123, 11 B. 537, 28 M. 355, R.) Held, therefore, that the order of the lower Court directing the sale of the zemindari should be set aside; and that, as the second defendant had the advantage of the advances under the suit mortgage, which were made for protecting his right to succession, he should be made personally liable on the decree and that the decree-holder should, therefore, be allowed to amend the execution petition by inserting a prayer for execution against the second defendant, personally, and that the receiver appointed by the lower Court should be retained. Where a receiver has been validly appointed on the ground that the property was the subject matter of the suit, and it, afterwards, turns out on appeal that the decree only operates against the defendants, personally, the appellate Court has jurisdiction to maintain the receiver as a method of realising the decree amount from the judgment-debtor personally. (122)—Ss 6 (a), 85, 9 (a) (b)—Persons entitled to redeem—Heirs of mortgagor—Persons having interest in property—Joinder as parties of all persons interested in property—Under Buddhist law children have no vested interest in parental property during the life-time of either parent—General principle to be followed in mortgage cases.—Children cannot stop their parents from doing as they choose, with their property, but when they succeed to their parents' rights on the parents' death, they are at liberty to exercise a right of pre-emption for the recovery of the property that may have been alienated without their consent. The mortgagor of certain land died, leaving a widow and seven sons and daughters. One of the daughters against the will of her mother, sued singly for redemption, held that she had no status to sue. The Transfer of Property Act is not in force in Burma, but the rules laid down in it, founded as they are upon long experience of English law, may for the most part be taken as safe guides to the general principles of justice and equity which the Courts are bound to administer, and there are standing instructions to that effect. In suits relating to mortgage, the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act on the subject may generally be taken with safety as guides to those principles of justice, equity and good conscience that constitute the law, not contained in specific enactments in force, which the Courts have to administer under s. 4 (2) of the Civil Courts Regulations, and the Courts have been instructed to this effect in Circular No. 24 (Civil of 1892). In accordance with the rule embodied in s. 85 of the Act all persons interested in the mortgaged property ought to be made parties to a redemption suit, and this should be the established practice. On the principle laid down in s. 91 of the Act, among the persons entitled to redeem are the mortgagor and his heirs, and persons having an interest in the property or in the right of redemption; but in this instance none of these descriptions applied to plaintiff, and she could come under no other clause in the section. Hindu law is, of course, not Buddhist law, but the indebtedness of the latter to the former and the light which is thrown by the one on the other, must be acknowledged, and it would take a great deal to persuade any Court in Burma that a Burmese Buddhist widow could, in matters of inheritance, from her husband, be in an inferior position to a Hindu widow. The heir of the deceased husband under Buddhist law is his widow, and not any of his children until the death of the widow, and the children have no such interest in the estate as is contemplated by s. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act. The heir must be the existing heir actually in possession of or in a position to possess the inheritance, and not merely an expectant and possible heir in the future, and the interest must be an immediate subsisting and not merely a future contingent interest. The language of s. 91 and of s. 6 (a) implies this. The relative positions of a Hindu widow succeeding as her husband's heir, and of the reversioner, are in some ways analogous to those of a Buddhist widow and her younger children, and at least serve to illustrate the nature and extent of the respective rights of the latter. debt passes to the transferee the securities for the debt; but what is sold is primarily not the charge, but the debt. The assignment, being of a claim for less than Rs.100, falls within the provisions of s. 18 of the Registration Act, and need not be registered. The words "other intangible thing" in s. 54 of Act IV of 1882 might include a charge, but construed with reference to the context should be taken to mean interests of the nature of reversions. The distinction between the two classes of property mentioned in the section was with a view to preserve a similar distinction created by ss. 17 and 18 of the Registration Act. The assignment of a charge for less than Rs. 100 does not require registration. It would be very anomalous if the transfer of a hypothecation should require registration when the original hypothecation did not require it. SUBRAMANIAM v. (25 M. 610, R.; 18 A. 265, Appr.) The words "likely to become necessary" in s. 130 seem to point rather to a case in which, after the right of action has accrued, litigation is impending, than to a remote possibility of a suit at some future time, when the right to sue shall have actually matured. The word "debt" in s. 8, cl. (5) is not used in the widest sense, for, if so, it would cover the case of judgment debt which is excepted from the operation of s. 135. The word should be confined to such debts as fall within the general category of actionable claims. Where a person leased out his property for a monthly allowance, and then assigned his right to receive the allowance, and thereupon the assignee sued the lessees for the amount so due, but the lessees having previously taken a mortgage of the same property, claimed to set-off the amount due to them from the lessor in respect of the mortgage on the date of the assignment, held that the set-off must be allowed, unless the right has been lost by waiver, estoppel by conduct, etc. But as the mortgagor had, by a deed of trust, executed subsequent to the mortgage, transferred all his property to the trustee in trust for his son after the payment of all his debts including the mortgage debt, and as the mortgagee had, by "postponement deed" executed by him, arranged with the trustee to place himself in the position of a second mortgagee, with reference to certain other creditors of the mortgagor, and as the mortgagor was a consenting party to the arrangement, it must be held, that neither the mortgagor nor the persons claiming through him, can plead that the above action of the mortgagee disentitled him from relying on the personal remedy against the mortgagor, given to him by the mortgage. The trustee and the mortgagor, in the above case, did not occupy the position of a principal debtor and surety respectively, and the fact that the mortgagee had granted time to the trustee did not entitle loss of the mortgagor's personal liability to the mortgagee. The mortgagor's son had sued to set aside the lease on the ground that it was obtained by undue influence and fraud. The lessees contended that, if that suit should succeed, they would be entitled to a refund of the consideration paid for it by way of the monthly payments and that as that would be an equity to which the lessor would be subject, his assignee would also be bound by it, held that under ss. 38 and 41, Specific Relief Act, the award of compensation and the amount thereof, in the event of the lease being so set aside, will depend upon circumstances as they shall exist at the time of the cancellation and that, therefore, any such possible equity in the pending action cannot be relied upon as a defence or even a temporary bar to the present action by the assignee. Arrangements of the above description which absolutely debar a person, to whom the proprietary rights have passed, from exercising those rights, impose conditions which no Court ought to recognize or give effect to. Consequently, a covenant, affecting a sale deed, the effect of which is to disable the vendee for ever from either alienating or enjoying the interest conveyed to him, is not only contrary to public policy, but also in violation of the principles enunciated in ss. 10 and 11 of the Transfer of Property Act. Where the object of the restraint on alienation by the reversioners was the protection of the rights of the widows to receive maintenance from what had been the estate of their husbands, the alienees from the reversioners who have accepted mortgage contrary to the provisions of the deed of settlement, acquire rights subject to the rights of maintenance possessed by the widows (4 A. 518, R.) A restraint on alienation qualified as to time may be valid. A condition or conditional limitation upon alienation of a contingent interest before it vests, is good. Semble.—Whether a condition or conditional limitation upon alienation limited in time, is not bad when attached to a vested interest? S. 11 of the Transfer of Property Act recognises the elementary principle that a transferee of property who takes an absolute interest, as for instance, a donee or purchaser, cannot be restrained in his enjoyment or disposition of it by any condition inserted in the transfer. Such a condition deprives the property of its legal incidents and is inconsistent or repugnant to the main purpose of the transfer. It is consequently arbitrary and not enforceable in a Court of law. A purchaser is not justified in shutting his eyes and buying recklessly from a vendor without any inquiry, and resisting the real owner on the ground that the real owner did not come forward. He must make some reasonable inquiry into title before he can take advantage of the doctrine of purchaser for value without notice which could protect him against an undiscoverable and hidden equitable interest. When he has taken reasonable care to ascertain his vendor's title then no doubt if there is an equitable interest of which he could by such reasonable care discover no trace, the doctrine of purchaser for value without notice may stand him in good stead. Reasonable care is to be expected from every one who claims to have purchased free from a really existing right, equitable or legal, and when the purchaser has failed to exercise it, he cannot claim that the real owner should be called on to prove his good faith and innocence instead. After the sale M attached and sold the property in execution of a simple money decree against the heirs of G, and purchased it himself and obtained possession. In the present case, the only precaution taken by the transferee was that he satisfied himself that the names of his transferors had been recorded in the Government papers as in possession of the property transferred, and it was held that the circumstances of the case were such as would have rendered it incumbent on a man of ordinary prudence not to rest satisfied with merely seeing that his transferor's names were entered in the Government registers, but to go on to enquire further whether the property was really theirs and that, therefore, the transferee had failed to take the necessary amount of reasonable care to ascertain that his transferors had power to make the transfer. Rent Act* (XVIII of 1875)—Execution sale of mortgagor's rights after the passing of the Act, effect of.—K, the plaintiff appellant, who obtained possession as mortgagee under a deed of 1869, on being dispossessed of the lands comprised in the mortgage, sued to recover possession of them. Among other defendants, he impleaded F and W who had created a mortgage of the properties in 1872 along with one of the mortgagors who executed the sale deed of 1869. F and W repudiated the mortgage of 1869, on which the suit was brought, on the ground that they were not parties to it and that it was not therefore binding on them. It appeared, however, that, at the time when the deed of 1869 was executed, F and W were aware of the transaction, by which K became the mortgagee of the whole property inclusive of their shares, and yet, stood by and allowed it to appear that then the mortgagors had the right to mortgage the entire property. Under these circumstances, the equitable doctrine in s. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act as to the validity of a transfer by an ostensible owner was held applicable in favour of the plaintiff appellant K. (11 B.L.R. 46, R.) Further, the proprietary rights of one of the mortgagors of 1869 had been purchased at a Court-sale in 1876 by one of the mortgagees under the deed of 1872, and it was held that, on the execution-sale in 1876, the mortgagor's sir rights and interests mortgaged in 1869 assumed a different character unde the operation of the provisions in s. 7 of Act XVIII of 1873, and over that tenure in its altered character of occupancy tenure, although there was still the mortgage charge, the mortgagee had no right to physical possession of the land itself. A house was then built on the land and she mortgaged it to a Chetty without the consent of her husband but for the benefit of her son. The mortgage contained a power of sale. It was proved that her husband came to know of the mortgage and took no steps to set it aside until after the Chetty refused to allow his wife further time to pay off the mortgage-money. He then filed this suit. Held, that, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the house must be presumed to be the joint property of husband and wife, and that the mortgage of house was under the circumstances not a bona fide mortgage without notice for consideration; that the husband must be held to have acquiesced in the mortgage; but that, from his consent to the mortgage, no presumption could be made that he consented to the power of sale. (185)—S. 41 — Sale — Purchase—Power of vendor—Reasonable care—Constructive notice.—The doctrine expressed in s. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, is of universal applicability. A purchaser from the ostensible owner cannot resist the real owner's claim unless he can show that he took reasonable care to ascertain that the transferring ostensible owner had power to make the transfer, and that he acted in good faith. What is to be deemed reasonable care depends upon the circumstances of each case. Mere reliance upon the entry of the vendor's name in the Government revenue registers is not under all circumstances sufficient to constitute reasonable care in ascertaining whether the vendor has power to make a sale. (23 A. 442, F.) Where therefore the information given by the vendor, namely that he derived his title under a registered deed, was such as to put any reasonable man upon enquiry and lead him to ask for production of the original deed, and, if it was not produced, to ask for explanation for its non-production and in any case to require to see a registration copy of it, held—that the purchaser must be held to have had constructive notice of the contents of the deed owing to his negligence in not doing what any prudent man would have done. property, his sister's son entered into possession and dealt with the property as his own. The sapindas of the deceased sued to recover possession of the property by setting aside a sale executed by the sister's son. The purchasers relied on s. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act and contended that, as they purchased it from the ostensible owner and the real owners stood by and gave no warning to them, the latter were estopped from questioning the sale. Held that, as there was nothing to show that the sister's son was the ostensible owner with the consent of the plaintiffs, they were not precluded from putting forward their title as against the purchasers from the sister's son. The fact that the plaintiffs did not come forward to claim the property or warn the intending purchasers, in the absence of any misrepresentation in act or word, could not prejudice the plaintiffs. It was urged on second appeal in this case, that as s. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act had not been expressly pleaded by the appellant, the first appellate Court was wrong in having taken it into consideration for the purpose of disposing of the case, but the High Court held that, under the circumstances of the case, it was competent to that Court to have based its decision on the ground not put forward by the parties. Where the Court sees that the rights of one of two innocent parties must be sacrificed, it is entitled to consider whether anything in the conduct of, or in representations made by, the party who comes into Court and seeks relief, has debarred him from asserting his rights. A purchaser of inam land from the holder of a service inam, who was prohibited by law (s. 5 of Act VI of 1895) from alienating the property, cannot claim a valid title to it on the ground that it was subsequently enfranchised and a patta for the land was granted to the alienor. (215)—Ss. 43 and 41—Rights of sub-mortgagee—Whether sub-mortgage is transfer of immoveable property—Equitable mortgage—Preference over legal mortgage, where latter is not taken with notice of prior charge—Notice, actual or constructive.—A sub-mortgagee has not merely the rights against the mortgage debt. A sub-mortgage comprises, (a) the personal covenant of the sub-mortgagor, (b) the transfer of the original mortgage debt and mortgaged property with the benefit of all powers and remedial clauses contained in the original mortgage, and (c) in English mortgages a power of sale. Held, therefore, that a man, who assigns a mortgage or sub-mortgages, does transfer immoveable property within the meaning of s. 43 of the Act. The mere fact of a person depositing certain title-deeds with another is sufficient evidence of a representation that he was authorised to transfer the property to which the deeds refer. S. 43 protects a purchaser or transferee for value without notice, and there is no such provision in it as is found in s. 41, requiring the transferee to take reasonable care to ascertain the power of his transferor to give a clear title. There is no authority for the proposition that a transferee is to be imputed with notice under s. 43, if he has not exercised the utmost care in investigating his transferor's title. Equitable mortgages are not entitled to preference over legal mortgages, unless the latter be taken with notice of the prior charge, and such notice may be either actual or constructive. And a person must be held to have had constructive notice of a prior mortgage, if such mortgage would have come to his knowledge, had he exercised the diligence of an ordinarily prudent man, and if the facts show that he did not exercise such diligence. Right to sale of the whole mortgaged property. —L mortgaged his village to the plaintiff's father and the defendant in lieu of Rs. 21,000, each of the mortgagees advancing Rs. 10,500, as a detail given at the foot of the mortgage-deed showed The defendant sued L for Rs. 10,500 and in default of payment prayed that half the property mortgaged might be put up to sale. The plaintiff's father was not made a party to that litigation. The defendant obtained a decree in accordance with the plaint. The plaintiff as the legal representative of his father brought a suit against the defendant and L to recover Rs. 10 500, and in default of payment prayed that the whole of the mortgaged property might be put up to sale. Held, that on a proper construction of the mortgage-deed there was one mortgage and not two. The whole of the property was clearly mortgaged as security for the whole of the debt. The detail at the foot of the deed was intended to protect the rights of the mortgages inter se, and did not affect the relation of the mortgagor with the mortgagee. Held, therefore, that the whole of the mortgaged property was liable to be sold in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim. Subraya after some years died, and his interest as mortgagee survived to his younger brother Ramkrishna. Thereafter Ramkrishna died; and since then Subraya's widow Gowri took possession of the property and managed the same, and got her name placed on the Khata as the owner of the property. She also recovered rent from the defendant for the years 1902 and 1903. The person who was really entitled to the property at Ramkrishna's death was his sister, the plaintiff. She sued to recover rent for the years 1902 and 1903 from the defendant on the ground that Gowri had no authority to receive rent and give a discharge for the same. It was found that the defendant in making the payment to Gowri had acted in good faith and had no notice of the plaintiff's interest in the property. Held, that the defendant was not chargeable with the rent sued for, as s. 50 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, applied to the case. The language of s. 50 is general. It applies even to cases where there has not been an assignment by the lessor during the tenancy. KAVERIAMMA v. LINGAPPA, 10 Bom. L.R. 1190=33 B. 96.

It was also found that he knew that the persons who sold it could only sell it under certain circumstances, and that he wilfully abstained from making any enquiries on the subject. Held, that the defendant was not entitled to the cost of improvements, as it could not be said that he believed and in good faith that the vendor conveyed a good title. Good faith within the meaning of s. 51, T.P. Act, is not necessarily precluded by facts showing negligence in investigating the title. NANJAPPA GOUNDAN v. (226)—S. 51—Bona fide improvements by a stranger on another's property—Equitable rights in him before eviction—Compensation for improvements.—Under the law in England, to raise an equity in favour of a stranger building on another's land, two things are required, first, that the person expending the money supposes himself to be building on his own land; and, secondly, that the real owner, at the time of the expenditure, knows that the land belongs to him, and not to the person expending the money in the belief that he is the owner. The law as laid down in s. 51 of the Act, however, does not, in all respects, follow the law of England. The section requires merely that the transferee mentioned therein shall have made the improvements believing, in good faith, that he is absolutely entitled to the property. There is nothing in the wording of the section to justify the contention that the real owner must, at the time of expenditure, know that the land belongs to him. Under the section the transferee who, after having made the improvements on the property, is subsequently evicted by any person having a better title, has a right to require the person causing the eviction either to have value of the improvement estimated and paid to him or to sell to him such person's interest in the property at the market-value thereof irrespective of the value of such improvements. S. 51 of the Act does not apply in terms as between landlord and tenant. Both under theHindu and the Mahomedan Law as well as under the common law of India, a tenant who erects a building on land let to him can only remove the building and cannot claim compensation in eviction. (27 M. 211, R.) Mere knowledge on the part of the plaintiff that improvements are made on his land is not enough to estop him in a suit for possession. If there is no express contract, unless the lessor is estopped from suing for possession, the lessee cannot claim compensation. The tenant should know under what terms he has been let into possession, and the law lays no duty upon the landlord to remind his tenant of his title under which he holds the land. If a tenant, knowing the extent of his interest in the land in his possession, chooses to expend money upon a title which he must know would soon come to an end, that is his own folly, and he cannot ask the owner of the land to recoup him for such expenditure. The effect of the doctrine of lis pendens is not to annul the conveyance made in contravention of it, but only to render it subservient to the rights of the parties to the litigation. The Subordinate Judge treated this payment as valid and ordered the defendants to deliver up possession of the mortgaged property to the plaintiff. On the 7th January, 1902, the District Judge reversed the order. The High Court held that the cause of action survived to the three remaining defendants, reversed the order passed by the District Judge and remanded the case to his Court for determining if any good cause existed for extending the time. When the case went back to the District Judge, defendant No. 1's name was omitted from the array of parties ; time for payment was extended and payment having been duly made, the property was ordered to be delivered to the plaintiff. Defendant No. 1's widow intervened on the ground that, as she was not a party to the order passed by the District Judge, she was not liable to be dispossessed under the order. The Subordinate Judge granted her application. The plaintiff thereupon brought a suit to establish his right to the possession of the property. The Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiff's claim, but on appeal, his suit was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff's rights were affected by his own negligence in omitting to bring upon the record the representatives of defendant No. 1 ; though they were not affected by the partition between the defendants which did not contravene the rule of law embodied in s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. Batchelor, J., confirmed the decree on second appeal. On appeal, under the Letters Patent: Held, that the partition in question was a " transfer or other dealing with the property in suit" within the meaning of s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act ; and being pendente lite was void against the plaintiff. Held, further, that the plaintiff could not be defeated on the ground of his negligence in not drawing the attention of the Court to the partition between the defendants, of which he did not know anything. When a suit is once rightly launched, the array of parties is virtually stereotyped and cannot be changed pendente lite by mere act of parties. It is part of every litigant's right, so far as the subject matter and conduct of the suit are concerned, to know precisely where he stands. He is entitled to know who his opponents are, and when that has been definitely and finally ascertained, to insist that no dealing on their parts, with the property in suit, shall compel him to go further afield, and bring in new parties, who but for such dealing could have had no locus standi at all. A complete right needs a person of incidence as well as a person of inherence. No party during the conduct of a suit has any power by dealing with the property to change the person of incidence or inherence to the detriment of the other. ISHWAR v. DATTU, 15 Bom. L.R. 366.

A suit to enforce a mortgage lien on immoveable property is, in this sense, clearly, a contentious suit, and does not cease to be so because the decree actually passed in it is the result of a compromise, or is consented to by the defendant. (29 M. 426, F.B., F.; 12 M. 439, Not F.; 18 C. 188, Expl.; 27 C. 77, R) The doctrine of lis pendens is applicable also to conveyances made between the decree nisi passed in a mortgage suit and the institution of proceedings for bringing the property to sale. The protection given to the plaintiff under s. 52, Transfer of Property Act, extends up to the final satisfaction of the conditional decree, since it might be otherwise rendered nugatory by the judgment-debtor's dealing with the mortgaged property during the six months grace necessarily allowed him by the conditional decree, during which time the decree-holder cannot apply for a decree absolute. (29 M. 426, F.B., Rel. on ; 20 A. 349, Concurred in ; 22 B. 939, R) Although a fresh lease to avoid loss of rent of a holding that had been abandoned by a tenant might possibly be regarded as an " ordinary and reasonable incident of interim beneficial enjoyment, " a lease, without the sanction of the Court, of waste land with the option of either cultivating or keeping it under grass, is not such an incident nor necessary, but an act materially curtailing the lessor's rights in the village which the mortgagee was entitled to bring to sale intact. in his suit. Their Lordships were unable to agree in the view which seems to have obtained in India that a suit contentious in its origin and nature was contentious within the meaning of that section until a summons was served upon the opposite party. Held, that the doctrine of lis pendens is that "pendente lite neither party to the litigation can alienate the property in dispute so as to affect his opponent." F.H. made for the first time an application to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner to allow him to redeem N.K's mortgage and repeated the same at the hearing of this appeal before their Lordships. Held, that on the sale being confirmed the equity of redemption was extinguished. (248)—S. 52 — Lis pendens — Alienation after the institution of suit but before service of summons—Contentious suit—Active prosecution of the suit.—An alienation of property after the institution of the suit but before the summons could be served upon the defendant is affected by the rule of lis pendens. Per Jenkins, C.J. —S. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, imposes two conditions, (a) the existence of a contentious suit, and (b) that the transfer should be during its active prosecution in a Court of the kind described in the section. The word "contentious" in s. 52 is used to introduce into the section a condition that the suit must be real and not collusive. It is impossible to think that it indicates a quality that cannot belong to a suit until service of summons or that a suit in other respects contentious is not so, because the plaintiff may have been unable to serve the summons on the defendant. Semble.—It is worthy of consideration whether the risk of the hardship to the purchaser could be diminished by requiring a lis pendens to be registered before it can bind transferees for value. Per Beaman, J.—The word "contentious" in s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, qualifies the whole doctrine of lis pendens, that is to say, that there can be no lis pendens without a contentious suit. The expression, "during the active prosecution," in the section, subject to that qualification defines the point of time at which the rule comes into operation. The former conditions the existence of lis pendens, the latter fixes the commencement and continuance of its existence. From the moment a suit of any sort whatever, except only collusive suits, is filed it is potentially contentious. And for the purpose of bringing the rule of lis pendens into operation, there must be an active prosecution of that suit. What is or what is not an active prosecution must be, from the very nature of terms employed, always in some degree a question of fact. KRISHNAPPA v. SHIWAPPA, 9 Bom. L. R. 530=31 B. 393.

(249 to 259)—S. 52—Lis pendens—Contentious suit Compromise decree—Sale pending suit—Purchaser bound by the decree.—An honest compromise, incorporated into a decree under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, is just as effectual for purposes of s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act as a decree passed by the Court. S transferred a portion of the property which formed the subject-matter of a partition suit to which she was a party. After the transfer, S died. Her reversioners were already on the record as parties. Subsequently the suit terminated in a compromise decree: Held, that the purchasers from S were bound by the compromise decree. (260)—S. 52—Decree passed upon a compromise.—Held, that, if the other conditions of the section are satisfied, s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to a case in which a decree is passed upon a compromise. (261)—S. 52—Lis pendens—Suit to enforce simple mortgage, ending in compromise—Execution sale pending suit—Purchaser, if bound by compromise—"Contentious" suit—"Immoveable property" suit respecting.—The mere fact that a suit is terminated by a consent decree does not take the suit out of the operation of the doctrine of lis pendens as enunciated in s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act. A suit to be "contentious" within the meaning of s. 52 need not be contested in all its stages. A contentious suit is one in which a party having difference with another puts the law in motion as against the other The doctrine of lis pendens applies to a suit to enforce a simple mortgage. The doctrine applies to a purchase at an execution sale pending the suit. TINOODHAN CHATTERJEE v. TRAILOKHYA CHARAN SANYAL, 17 C.W.N. 413.

(262)—S. 52—Lis pendens—Review application, effect of—Laches.—On 19th May, 1905, appellant sued A and B his mortgagors, for a mortgage decree on certain lands. On 13th June, 1905, the Court, through an oversight, granted a money decree only. On 24th July, 1905, appellant applied for a review, and on 7th September, 1905, the Court amended the decree by changing the money-decree into a mortgage-decree. In the interval, on 3rd August, 1905, A and B, appellant's mortgagors, sold the lands to the respondent. Appellant sued the respondent to have this sale set aside under s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act: Held, that, though s. 52 had not been extended to the Pegu District, the equitable principles contained in it might be followed as the basis for a decision in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience. Held, that, even if the application for review were held to reopen the lis pendens, the applicant was not entitled to the benefit of the right, as he was (263)—S. 52—Transfer after decree and before appeal filed—Lis pendens Appeal—Final decree.—The function of an appellate Court is not under the Code of Civil Procedure (1882), the final decree in the case ; and the proceedings in the appellate Court must therefore be treated as a continuation of the proceedings in the lower Court. It is not open to a defeated suitor to file an appeal immediately as he has to obtain copies of the decree and judgment and he ought not to suffer for the delay imposed by law. There is no reason why this delay should prejudice him in this respect any more than the delays due to adjournments or stay of proceedings. The law of lis pendens in this country is founded on the necessity, if possible, of a final adjudication, and it is unjust that a plaintiff should be prejudiced by any acts of the defendant subsequent to the institution of the suit and with notice thereof. It cannot be challenged or questioned by third parties. The rule of lis pendens will operate in favour of a plaintiff, who at the time of the transfer was erroneously prosecuting his suit in a Court, which from defect of jurisdiction was unable to entertain it, and in consequence returned it for presentation to the proper Court, which Court ultimately decreed the suit on the basis of a lawful compromise. But it was the duty of the purchasers to apply to be made parties to the proceedings and, in those proceedings to claim under their purchase the right to redeem the mortgage. Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) —continued.

The decree is the evidence, and valuable evidence, that he who complains is a creditor but it is not the only evidence. The plaintiff's position may be proved otherwise, and proved as against the debtor where he is a party to the suit. The absence of a decree is not fatal; it may have the result that the proof required of the creditor becomes more complicated and the standard more exacting to prove the conditions requisite to success. Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) —continued.

Before the Transfer of Property Act came into force, the principles of English cases were adopted in considering Indian cases. A voluntary deed of transfer or conveyance, would have no effect as against a subsequent purchaser for consideration, the question of notice or no notice to the subsequent purchaser of the existence of the prior voluntary conveyance, being considered to be immaterial by the legal presumption of fraud, which a Court is empowered to make on the suits decided on the Statute 27 Eliz., Ch. 4. [R., 25 B. 202.] The words "may be presumed to have been made with such intent as aforesaid." in s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, should be construed in accordance with the cases decided under the Statute 27 Eliz., c. 4, [R., 25 B. 202. 17 C. Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) —continued.

(287)—S. 53—Fraudulent transfer — Good faith—Considerations.—The effect of cl. 1 of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, is that where there is an intention to defeat or delay creditors, it is immaterial whether there was consideration for the transaction, and if there was, whether it was adequate. The cl. 2 of the section amounts to a rule of evidence. It is applicable to the conditions stated in it, but cannot be treated as modifying the substantive law declared in the first and third paragraphs of the section. All it says is that where certain conditions specified in the clause exist the Court may presume the intent to defraud, defeat or delay; it does not exclude cases of transfers where the intention to defeat or delay may exist, though, so far as consideration is concerned, there may be nothing to say against them. The meaning of cl. 3 is that there must be both good faith and consideration to support a transfer by taking it out of the preceding paragraphs of the section. RANCHODDAS v. CHUNILAL, 5 Bom. L.R. 213.

(288)—S. 53—Good faith—Transfer not in good faith voidable even though with consideration — Single creditor entitled to maintain proceedings to avoid fraudulent transfers.—Held that, even where there is some consideration, the transaction will be avoided under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, if the element of good faith is not present. NARMAL DAS v. CHET RAM, 11 O.C. 197. (30 M. 6, 34 C. 999, R.)

(289)—S. 53—Fraudulent transfer of moveable property to the prejudice of creditors Good faith and consideration—Consideration in part discharge of debts.—Where property sought to be assigned is not immoveable property, s. 53 has no direct application, and the question must be decided by a reference to general principles of justice, equity and good conscience. Each case must depend upon its own circumstances, and in all the question is one of fact, whether the transaction is bona fide or is a contrivance to defraud creditors. It may be stated, generally, that a deed is void against creditors, when the debtor is in a state of insolvency or when the effect of the deed is to leave the debtor without the means of paying his present debts. If this is the condition of the debtor or the consequence of his act, it is not sufficient to render a deed valid that it should be made upon good consideration; for a good consideration does not suffice, if it be not also bona fide. There is nothing in s. 53 to prevent a creditor being given preference, provided nothing more is done by the transaction, either with reference to the transferor or transferee, so as to injuriously affect the creditors of the former. But, if the transaction is entirely invalid as against the creditors, it cannot be allowed to be treated as partly valid, even to the extent to which the consideration for the deed of assignment went in discharge of the executant's creditors. It is open to these satisfied creditors to protect themselves, by discharging the claims of the executant's other creditors, at whose instance the transaction is voidable. CHIDAMBARAM CHETTIAR v. SAMI IYER alias ARUNACHALAMAIYAR, 16 M.L.J. 427 =1 M.L.T. 351=30 M. 6. [Appl., 5 M.L.J. 283; R., 34 C. 999=11 C.W.N. 889=6 C.L.J. 410, 11 O.C. 197, 5 Ind. Cas. 33.]

(290)—S. 53—Conveyance in fraud of creditors—Suit to declare same void—Parties—Maintainability—Transfer in favour of creditors not void merely because it gives preference—Creditor's participation in fraud—"Good faith"—Interpretation of Statute—Statutes in pari materia—Stat. 13 Eliz., Chap. 5, s. 6—Bona fide."—A suit to set aside a conveyance alleged to be fraudulent within the meaning of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act must be brought by or on behalf of all the creditors. (16 B. 1, 27 B. 146, 9 C.W.N. 225=32 I.A. 1, R.) Where a debtor purported to convey his properties for adequate consideration, for the purpose of paying off some only of his creditors, and it was proved that the debts were genuine debts and were all discharged out of the consideration for the conveyance. Held—that the transfer was not voidable under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is not enough, in order to support a conveyance or transfer as against creditors, that it be made for valuable consideration. It must also be bona fide. A mere fraudulent intent on the part of the grantor alone will not invalidate the transfer, if it is for valuable consideration and there is no want of good faith on the part of the grantee. A creditor to whom such a transfer is made, however, occupies a more favoured position than a person who purchases for present consideration. For, in the absence of a law of bankruptcy, a preferential transfer of property to one creditor cannot be declared fraudulent as to other creditors, although the debtor, in making it, intended to defeat their claims, and the creditor had knowledge of such intention. If the only purpose of the creditor is to secure his debt, and the property is not worth materially more than the amount of the debt, the transaction is not fraudulent. If, however, the transfer is not in reality a preference of an actual debt, but is a mere colourable device to place the debtor's property beyond the reach of his creditors, or if the transaction extends beyond the necessary purpose of a mere preference, so as to secure to the debtor some benefit or advantage, or to unnecessarily hinder and delay other creditors, the transfer is fraudulent. Stat. 13, Eliz., ch. 5, s. 6, and the third paragraph of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act compared, and held that reference to English authorities bearing on the interpretation of the expression "bona fide" in the former enactment, for the purpose of interpreting the expression "good faith" in the latter, is not only legitimate but essential. (292)—S. 53—Fraudulent transfer—Creditors—Interpretation. — The term "creditors" in s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, includes not only the creditors of the transferor at the time or prior to the time of the assignment complained of, but also the subsequent creditors of the transferor. S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, lays down distinctly three propositions, the first is, that if the intent to defraud, defeat or delay is established, then the assignment is voidable at the option of the creditors. The second is, that if the transfer is made gratuitously or for a grossly inadequate consideration, then the Court may presume that the intention of the parties was to defraud the creditors. The third proposition is, that where the good faith of the transferor is established, and where he is shown to have paid consideration, then the section has no application. HOOSEINBHAI v. HAJI ESMAIL, 5 Bom. L.R. 255.

(293)—S. 53—Fraudulent transfer—Intent to defeat or defraud creditors—Consideration wanting or grossly inadequate.—As good faith and consideration render s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, wholly inapplicable, a bare intent to defeat or delay the creditors does not fall within the first paragraph of the section. The intent, in order to render a transfer voidable at the option of a single creditor, must be an intent to defeat or delay not only the creditor claiming that option but the creditors of the transferor, i.e., it must so impair the estate as to render it incapable for the remaining assets to satisfy its general liabilities otherwise the creditor can have recourse to other assets. It is not until this general inability of the estate is established, that any person complaining that he has been defeated or delayed can claim the option given by the section. The second paragraph of s. 53 shows that the intent may be presumed from the effect when the consideration is either wanting altogether or is grossly inadequate. The second paragraph of s. 53, read with the third paragraph of the section, makes it clear that the presumption of intent cannot arise from the mere effect of the transfer, even though the consideration may be inconsiderable, unless the third paragraph is rendered inoperative by want of good faith in the transferee. In cases to which the provisions of the last paragraph of s. 53 do not apply, i.e., in cases where there is either no good faith or no consideration or where there is no good-faith and the consideration is grossly inadequate, there is nothing to prevent the presumption of an intent to defeat or delay creditors arising from a transfer which has the effect of defeating or delaying creditors. (295)—S. 53—Fraudulent transfer—Transfer for love and affection—Gratuitous transfer—Consideration—Contract Act, s. 25 (1)—Evidence to prove transfer fraudulent—Burden of proof—Right to sue—Suit by one of several creditors to avoid transfer—Transferor adjudicated insolvent—No objection to frame of suit taken. Decree, form of.—The provisions of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act are in accordance with general principles of justice, equity and good conscience and as such should be taken as a guide by the Courts of this Province. All that s. 25 of the Contract Act provides is that transactions of the kind therein specified are not void ; it does not enact that such transaction must be deemed to be for consideration. The fact that a transfer of property is not void by reason of the provisions of s. 25 (1) of the Contract Act, does not make that transfer a non-gratuitous transfer for the purposes of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. A transfer of property made on account of natural love and affection is purely gratuitous and cannot be deemed to be a transfer for consideration. Where it appears that a transferor was indebted to a creditor, prior to the date of transfer, that the transfer was gratuitous and that the transferor has not been able to pay the debts, it is incumbent on the transferee to show that, at the time the transfer was made, the transferor had undisposed assets sufficient to discharge his debts, and, in default of such proof, the Court may legitimately assume that the transfer of valuable part of his property by the transferor has in fact defeated or delayed the creditor and that the intention of the transferor was to defraud such creditor. The mere fact that the transferor has, subsequent to the transfer, satisfied some of his creditors is insufficient to show that he was in a position to satisfy all his creditors. A suit to avoid a fraudulent transfer should be brought by, or on behalf of, all the creditors of the transferor. It is not open to one of the body of creditors to sue for a declaration that the property is liable to be sold in execution of his decree, especially when the suit is instituted after insolvency proceedings have commenced at the instance of the transferor.

Where a suit to avoid a fraudulent transfer was brought only by one of the creditors, but no objection was taken to the frame of suit in the Courts below or in the grounds of appeal before the Chief Court, while the transferor had meanwhile been adjudicated an insolvent, the proper decree to be passed in the case is that the transfer shall not affect the right of the transferor's creditors to treat the transferred property as still belonging to the transferor or the right of the Receiver to realize and distribute the same rateably among such creditors. Where a plaintiff sues for a declaration that a particular transfer in his favour is a good and valid one, it is incumbent upon him to make out in the first instance the validity of the sale in his favour. Although an erroneous finding of fact, cannot be challenged in second appeal unless it is shown that there is an error of procedure or that there is no evidence in support of the finding yet, inferences drawn from facts found might be questioned in second appeal. BAKHT BALI SINGH v. LAKHRANI KUNWAR, 15 Ind. Cas. 509.

(297)—S. 53—Conversion of immoveable property—Payment of consideration alone not sufficient to rebut presumption—Use and meaning of the word 'colorable.'—If a person in involved circumstances, with the intention of defeating or delaying his creditors, converts his immoveable property which could easily be got hold of by his creditors into money, the mere fact that consideration was paid for the sale would not enable the vendee to contend that the sale was not voidable under s 53, Transfer of Property Act. Notwithstanding any fraudulent intent on the part of the alienor, a bona fide transferee taking a transfer without notice of the alienor's fraudulent intention would be protected. Where a debtor makes alienations to the extent of Rs. 6,000 but discharges in a month thereafter only Rs. 2,000 and odd debts and soon after is declared bankrupt, held that the alienations are invalid as against creditors under s. 53, Transfer of Property Act. Where the plaint alienation was made with a view to discharge particular debts but those debts were paid off a month after, the Judge was not bound to find that the payments were made out of the money paid by the plaintiff. The use of the word 'colorable' may well be avoided if by it is only meant that an alienation is voidable by

It was found that the transaction put forward by the plaintiff was fraudulently and collusively entered into in order to defeat her husband's creditors Held that the award being the result of fraudulent and collusive arrangements to defeat the creditors, the mere fact that the parties in perfecting the fraud obtained a decree, would not afford an answer to the creditor's claim; and that as the arbitration award and the decree thereon were fictitious proceedings not taken for the purpose of paying the true-dower debt, but to make it appear that the property was the wife's when in fact it was the husband's, the rule laid down in 8 A. 178 and A.W.N. 1887, 52 was not applicable. (310)—S. 53—Fraudulent transfers—May be presumed to have been made with such intent as aforesaid—Shall presume—St. 13, Eliz., c. 5.—There is no warrant for construing the words "may be presumed to have been made with such intent as aforesaid" in s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, in accordance with the cases decided under the St. 27, Eliz, c. 4: since, to read the may presume of the section as the equivalent of shall presume would be to wrest the words from their natural meaning, and to disregard the well-recognized distinction between the two phrases. The presumption of s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, applies equally to cases that previously fell under 13 Eliz., c. 5. The words of the section vest the Court with a discretion in the matter, and do not impose on it the obligation to presume an intent to defraud. BAI COOVERBAI v. MAHOMED, 7 Bom. L. R. 267.

(311)—S. 53, Fraudulent transfers—Issues—Burden of proof—Presumption.—In a suit, under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, the issues that should be raised by the Court are: 1. Was the transfer made with intent to defeat and delay the creditors of the judgment-debtor? 2. If so, was the purchaser from such judgment-debtor a transferee in good faith and for consideration? The onus of proving the first issue lies on the creditor; and if that be established, the onus of proving the second will lie on the transferee. For the purposes of a suit of this class, it is not illegal or immoral to prefer one creditor to another, and, it lies on the transferee (if the intent to delay be established) to prove good faith on his part and consideration; if, however, it be proved, that there was a valuable consideration adequate to the occasion, the Court will, on ordinary circumstances, be slow to hold that there was no good faith. (312) - S. 53 — Preference in favour of one creditor—Intent to defeat or delay other creditors—Burden of proof.—A party who intends to rely upon a document, as not within s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, because it merely creates a preference in favour of some of the creditors over the rest, must show strictly that the document is such and nothing more. So in the case of a document purporting to be a mere bona fide security given to a creditor to the extent of his debt, the inclusion of any fictitious debt in the document being prima facie evidence of an intention to defeat or delay the creditors, it would be upon the parties who wish to take advantage of the document to show that there was no such intention. another does not, in itself, render the transaction in favour of the preferred creditor voidable under the section. It is for the Courts to say, on the evidence taken as a whole, whether it is sufficient to warrant the inference that the transfer was made, with the intent to defeat or delay creditors ; and such an intent must be established affirmatively, by the person suing for the declaration that a sale-deed is invalid as against him, as being in fraud of the creditors. The fact that a barred or irrecoverable debt is set up as part of the consideration for the transfer is, no doubt, an element in the case, which must be taken into consideration. It is some evidence of fraud, but a finding of that sort is not so strongly suggestive of a fradulent intent, as a finding that the debts, set up as part of the consideration, have never existed and was fictitious. The difference between the amount of the debt found due and the value of the property at the date of the sale, must not only be substantial, but it must be so gross as necessarily to indicate that the transferor, when he executed the sale-deed, did so, with the knowledge that the value of the property was greatly in excess of the amount of the debt. (332)—S. 54—Sale of immoveable property of value less than Rs. 100—No registration—Delivery — Registration Act, III of 1877. —Under s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882, a sale of immoveable property of a value less than Rs. 100 may be validily made by mere delivery of possession thereof to the vendee although the instrument of sale is not registered. The change in the law made by s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, in regard to the sale of immoveable property of value less than Rs. 100, comes to this, that, whilst before the passing of Act IV of 1882, a sale by execution of an unregistered deed by the vendor in favour of the vendee was a valid sale irrespective of delivery of possession, such a sale-deed now would be invalid without delivery of possession. S. 54 gives two alternative methods of effecting the sale of such property which are equally valid: (1) by execution of a registered instrument of sale, or (2) by selling and delivering possession of the property sold. There is nothing in s. 54 which would render a sale, effected in the second alternative method, void or nugatory by reason of the execution of a non-registered deed of sale. IMAMUDDIN v. The nature of a compromise is that it is an acknowledgment of the existing rights of the parties. Delivery of possession is not therefore necessary to give effect to it. KRISHNA TANHAJI v. The plaintiff's guardian accordingly filed the suit, obtained possession and delivered over a moiety to the defendants. There was no fresh conveyance passed then. Later on the plaintiff filed a suit to recover possession of the moiety from the defendants, alleging that, as no fresh conveyance was passed by the guardian when he transferred possession of the property to the defendants, the title to it still vested in him (the plaintiff). The defendants in reply relied on their possession as purchasers for over ten years. Held that the registered deed which was a contract of sale, took effect as transfer as soon as the conditions of the deed were carried out. Its transfer therefore could, under s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, have been effected only by means of a registered instrument. Defendant claimed the property under an oral contract for sale, with possession given to him. Possession could not take the place of the registered deed required by s. 54, and defendant, therefore, even assuming that he was entitled to specific performance, cannot resist the present suit of the plaintiff against him, as the property has not passed to him and cannot vest in him unless he is in possession of a registered deed. (342)—S. 54—Transfer of immoveable property by unregistered deed—Optional registration—Vendor out of possession—Suit by purchaser for possession.—In declaring how transfers may be made, s. 54 draws a distinction between transfers of tangible immoveable property of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards, and of the value of less than Rs. 100. Of the former, it declares that transfer "can be made only by a registered instrument"; of the latter it declares that "transfer may be made either by a registered instrument or by delivery of the property." But the law does not state that such transfer can be made only by one of these means. Nor is it anywhere provided that a person out of possession shall not sell to another his right, title and interest in any property, nor is it declared that in such a case the transfer can be made only through a registered instrument. The actual rights may be conveyed through an unregistered instrument, for that, by the Registration Act, is receivable in evidence of the transaction, if the value of the property conveyed is less than Rs. 100. Apart from the section, registration is not a formality which creates any rights, although it affects the admissibility in evidence of the document registered. Registration is prima facie proof of intention to transfer the title; but it is no proof of operative transfer, if there was a condition precedent as to payment of consideration and the delivery of the deed, which condition must be strictly proved. The Court has to see what was the intention of the vendor, if no consideration passed. (27 C. 7, R.) Where it appeared that it was the intention of the owner, whether consideration passed or not, to transfer the property to the defendant who was his concubine, and the plaintiff claimed the property by right of inheritance, the defendant was not bound to prove payment of consideration, and the kobala, as it was, prevailed against the claim of the plaintiff. (347)—S. 54—Prior unregistered contract of sale—Subsequent registered sale—Notice—Suit for specific performance.—The plaintiff agreed to buy from the defendant, in consideration of Rs. 95, the property as to the defendant's title to which there was an action pending. The agreement was dated August 1884, and was in writing, but was not registered. By it, in the event of the defendant being successful in the suit then pending, he agreed to deliver possession of the property in question to the plaintiff, in the event of his failure, he agreed to return the purchase money. In March 1885, the suit, in which the defendant's title to the house was in question, was decided in his favour. In May 1885, he executed a registered sale-deed in respect of the house in favour of P. Plaintiff sued for the specific performance of the contract to sell the house to him. It appeared that P was aware at the time of the sale to him of the contract of August 1884 between his vendor and the plaintiff. Held, that the deed of August 1884, was admissible in evidence without registration, to prove the contract between plaintiff and the defendant, and also that as between the plaintiff and the defendant or any one taking under the latter with notice of the plaintiff's right, the plaintiff was entitled to specific performance of the contract and that s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act had no application. (348)—S. 54—Essence of—Vendee in possession at date of sale.—In case of sales of immoveable property of less than Rs. 100 in value, s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act speaks of a transfer by delivery of the property, and that delivery is the essence of the transaction. "You cannot invoke the principle of estoppel to defeat the plain provision of a statute, and we cannot evade the effect of s. 54 of T.P. In a suit by plaintiffs for recovery of the property, held, that the sale, not being for purposes binding upon the minors, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the whole of the property on refunding Rs. 200. Under s. 54 no interest passed to the purchaser by the agreement of sale, and on the death of the father the whole property went by survivorship to the plaintiff. The deed did not transfer any portion of the grantor's right of ownership. The creation of such a right by grant was not a transfer of ownership as was contemplated by s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, and the document creating such an easement did not require registration. The defendant purchased property worth less than Rs. 100 at an auction sale in execution of a decree against the plaintiff. In 1898, he executed an unregistered document on plain paper in favour of the plaintiff, in which he, the defendant, admitted that the property was the plaintiff's and that he agreed to hold possession as a tenant for five years; it was also agreed afterwards to make the property over to the plaintiff, and that, after the lapse of five years, the entire rights should vest in the plaintiff. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover possession; Held, that, under s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, the delivery of possession was an alternative to the execution and registration of a document, which was an act formal in a high degree, that the document did not amount to a delivery of possession by the defendant to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff did not acquire any title by means of the document. It declares that s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act shall be read as supplemental to the Registration Act (III of 1877). Its effect, therefore is to make s. 54, para. 3, Act IV of 1882, absolute, in so far as it prescribes that a transfer of ownership, by sale, of tangible immoveable properties of a value less than Rs. 100 can be made only by a registered instrument or by delivery of the property, and that if made otherwise, e.g., by an unregistered instrument unaccompanied by possession, the transfer or sale is inoperative, conferring no title on the vendee. In a contract for sale of land, where a breach takes place on account of the default of the vendor, the purchaser is entitled to be put as far as possible in the position he would have been in if the contract had been carried out on the day it was broken, and therefore he is entitled to the difference between the contract price and the market price on the day of breach. L.R. 421), declaring contracts by minors void applies also to sales of immoveable properties to persons who are minors. Such sales are wholly void. Per Benson, J. A sale necessarily involves the idea of a contract as its foundation, and the Privy Council has held that a contract by a minor is not merely voidable at the option of the minor, but is void. Per Krishnasawmy Iyer, J.—There can be no sale unless there are mutual agreements in its inception. It must be invariably preceded by the contract for the sale of the property, which, as defined by s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, is a contract that the sale of such property shall take place on terms settled between the parties. S. 55 again imposes on the buyer liabilities, in the absence of a contract to the contrary. The imposition of these liabilities involves the notion of competency to contract, which the opening words of the section also suggest. It being, therefore, impossible to conceive of a sale without a reciprocal promise, past or concurrent, there can be no legal sale in favour of a minor contracting party. NAVAKOTI NARAYANA CHETTY v. (379)—Ss. 54 and 55 (6) (b)—Contract for sale of land—Absence of proper registered sale deed—Delivery of possession to vendee—Suit in ejectment by vendor, whether maintainable when vendee's right to specific performance not barred. —The question in this case was whether a contract for sale, accompanied by delivery of possession gives the purchaser a lien on the property and such an interest as is sufficient to enable him to resist a suit in ejectment by the vendor, in other words, whether, where the vendee's right to obtain specific performance by way of execution of a sale-deed by the vendor has not become barred by time, the vendor is entitled to sue for recovery of possession from the vendee of the land agreed to be sold. Held, under s. 54 of the Act, a sale of immoveable property of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards can be made only by a registered instrument, and the section expressly enacts that a contract of sale "does not, of itself, create any interest in, or "charge on, such property." The latter provision could not be construed as enacting by implication, that contract for sale coupled with possession creates an interest or charge on the property even although the requirements of the section with reference to a registered instrument have not been complied with. The charge provided for by s. 55 (6) (b) of the Act in favour of a purchaser paying the price or portion thereof, when considered with the absence of any provision for the case of part performance by delivery of possession, shows that the latter was not intended to give rise to any interest in the property in the buyer. So, in a suit in ejectment, like the present case, instituted by the vendor, whose title is admitted, the defendant who has not secured the prescribed registered proof of his purchase cannot succeed by merely setting up a contract with himself on the part of the plaintiff to sell the disputed land and by showing that that contract is specifically enforcible. It might be said that, notwithstanding the express words of s. 54 of the Act, it is inequitable to apply the section as against a party, who is in possession and who, if he had sued for specific performance of the contract to sell, would have been entitled to a decree but the considerations of public policy on which the requirements laid down in s. 54 of the Act are based ought to be primarily taken into account it being borne in mind that, in enacting that section, it was the intention of the legislature, by means of compulsory registration, to minimise, as far as possible, the chances of litigation and to reduce the opportunities for perjury in connection with sales of immoveable property. When we assign the land, we shall receive 50 fanams more from you, and then we shall assign the land for these two amounts together." However, a year after, the mortgagors sold away the interest in the property to a third person. About twenty years thereafter, the purchaser's interest was sold in execution of a decree against him and bought by plaintiff, who instituted the present suit for redemption of the mortgage The defendant who was representative in interest of the mortgagee, asserted the pre-emptive right in defence of the suit: Held that plaintiff was entitled to a decree for redemption. Per Shephard, J.—Under the covenant, the defendant had no interest in the property. His right could be no other than a right to specific performance available under s. 27 of the Specific Relief Act against a transferee who had taken with notice of the covenant. Notice of the contract such as is required to satisfy the section must be notice of an existing obligation. In this case, the time for performance having long passed without any thing being done, the inference was that the right had been waived or otherwise discharged. Except the fact that the mortgage contained a covenant for pre-emption, there was nothing to show that the plaintiff took with notice of the contract sought to be enforced. Assuming that there was notice of the contract and that it was otherwise a valid contract, inasmuch as no suit to enforce it could be brought, the defendant could not be allowed to use it as an answer to the plaintiff's suit. Per Bhashyam Ayyangar, J.—A mortgagee may stipulate for the collateral advantage of a right of pre-emption in consideration of his advancing the mortgage loan, if such advantage does not directly or indirectly "clog the equity of redemption." The principle of this rule is that the option of sale is still left with the mortgagor, and he may redeem or sell as he likes; the only stipulation being that, in the event of his choosing to sell, he shall give the mortgagee the first refusal. But the stipulation contained in the present mortgage-deed was that the pre-emptor (the mortgagee) could exercise his option by paying, not the market price of the day nor the same price as that offered by a stranger, but the price fixed in the mortgage instrument itself. The true principle in such a case is whether the collateral advantage stipulated for himself by the mortgagee is or is not unconscionable or oppressive though it does not clog the redemption. In the present case, the collateral advantage, namely, the right of pre-emption, was one that could be enforced only by the equitable remedy of specific performance, and, prima facie, a bargain by which the mortgagor was tied down to a price by the instrument of mortgage whenever the occasion for exercising the right of pre-emption might arise, was oppressive and unconscionable. In cases in which the right of pre-emption springs from a contract, it rests only upon a covenant which does not run with the land. Being only a species of contract for the sale of immoveable property, the contract of pre-emption stands on no higher footing than a contract for the sale of immoveable property and does not of itself create any interest in or charge on the property which is subject to the right of pre-emption. Until the contract is carried out by specific performance either by act of parties or decree of Court, the pre-emptor acquires no title to or interest in such property, which alone can extinguish the right of redemption, though he may have a right to call for a conveyance of the property. The equity of redemption in a usufructuary mortgage being an intangible thing like a "reversion," can be transferred by sale only by a registered instrument and not by delivery of the property, though its value is less than Rs. 100. The equity of redemption in a simple mortgage may be tangible immoveable property, and its sale can be effected, if its value be below Rs. 100, without a registered instrument by mere delivery of the property. The right of a simple mortgagee in the property mortgaged is only an intangible thing like a charge on immoveable property within the meaning of s. 54, Tr. P. Act. A transfer by sale of a hypothecation executed to secure a debt under Rs. 100, cannot be made otherwise than by a registered instrument. The right of the mortgagee to enforce the specific performance of the contract to pre-empt was barred by lapse of time. The fact that the mortgagee was in possession could not save him from the law of limitation. RAMASAMI PATTAR v. able property, as security for the money borrowed and wound up by a statement to the effect that a deed of mortgage would be executed by the defendants, whenever such a document should be demanded by the plaintiff. Plaintiff sued, on the basis of this agreement, for recovery of the money as against the defendant, personally, and on the security of the properties mentioned in the title-deeds deposited. This agreement was not registered. Plaintiff contended that the agreement itself constituted a charge on the immoveable properties. Held, that the mere agreement to execute a mortgage of immoveable property to the obligee, does not create an interest in immoveable property. Compare s. 17 (h) of the Registration Act (III of 1877) and s. 54 (4) of the Transfer of Property Act. The charge which the vendor obtains under the Transfer of Property Act is different in its origin and nature from the vendor's lien given by Courts of Equity to an unpaid vendor. The latter is a creation of the Courts of Equity and can be modified to the circumstances of the case by the Court of Equity. As regards the former the law of India knows nothing of the distinction between legal and equitable property in the sense in which that is understood when equity is administered by the Court of Chancery in England; and the Transfer of Property Act gives a statutory charge upon the estate to an unpaid vendor unless it be excluded by contract. Such a charge stands in quite a different position from a vendor's lien. The Court has to find something, either express contract, or at least something from which it is a necessary implication that such a contract exists, in order to exclude the charge given by the statute. The charge is not excluded by a mere personal contract to defer payment of a portion of the purchase-money, or to take the purchase-money by instalments, nor it is excluded by any contract, covenant, or agreement with respect to the purchase-money which is not inconsistent with the continuance of the charge. A conveyance or sale in consideration of a covenant to pay a sum of money in the future is different from a sale in consideration of money which the purchaser covenants to pay. The distinction between the two may seem fine one, but it is a real distinction. The former does not give rise to a charge while the latter does. WEBB v. MACPHERSON, 5 Bom. L.R. 838.

(394)—S. 55—Covenant as to title—Warranty—Fraud—Misrepresentation—Caveat emptor.—One D, who had only a life estate in certain property, sold it to one C, and C sold it to the defendant, who subsequently sold it to the plaintiff. D and all the subsequent vendors professed absolute interest in the property. In the sale deed, executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff, there was a special covenant as to the vendor's title, and it was provided that if the property sold in whole or in part passed out of the plaintiff's possession owing to the claim of any person whatsoever, he would be entitled to claim from the defendant the value of the portion so lost. On a suit having been brought by the purchasers from the remainder-men, the property went away from the hands of the plaintiff. He then brought the present suit to recover his purchase-money from the defendant. It was contended on behalf of the defendant and held by the Court below that the defendant only purported to convey to the plaintiff such right as he had acquired himself and if D had only a limited interest, the defendant and the plaintiff had no more, that there was no fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the defendant, who had made over the title deeds to the plaintiff and that the principle of caveat emptor being applicable, the defendant was not liable. Held, that in view of s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act, the doctrine of caveat emptor does not apply to sales of land in India (2 C.W.N. 222, R.), and there being a special covenant protecting the plaintiff against any latent defect in title, the plaintiff was entitled to recover his purchase-money. claim transferred and assigned or responsible for any sum of money that may not be recovered by the assignee. Subsequently, the above defect was discovered and the assignee brought a suit for declaration that the assignment was void and for a refund of the consideration paid by him to the assignor for the assignment. Held, that the assignment was not void, and that the assignee was not entitled to the refund, in view of the special covenant referred to above. Assuming that the technical informality in the mortgage deed would constitute a breach of the covenant, by the vendor, under s. 55 the special covenant, upon which the vendor (mortgagee) relies, negatives the statutory covenant that the interest which the seller professed to transfer subsisted. In other words, there is a contract to the contrary, within the meaning of s.55. Non-compliance with the rule laid down in s. 59, as to attestation by witnesses, does not render the personal covenant to pay the debt void. With reference to bonds for money, which purported also to mortgage immoveable property for the debts, but which were not registered as required by the Registration Act, the non-registration has been held not to affect the validity of the contract to pay the debt, and there is no real difference between the two cases. Whether a particular affirmation of the quality of a specific thing sold is conditional, and the transaction is to be null, if the affirmation is incorrect, is only a question of the intention of the parties to be decided by the circumstances of each case. Where, in addition to the affirmation, there is a separate warranty also in the agreement, the existence of such separate warranty shows that the matter of the warranty is not a condition or essential part of the contract, but that the intention of the parties was to transfer the property in the subject of the sale at all events. In such cases, if the sale is made in good faith and there is a breach of the warranty, a purchaser is entitled only to compensation for the breach of the warranty and the sale is not even voidable. The present is an a fortiori case, inasmuch as the vendee (assignee) has chosen to contract to take the claim with all its defects, and to hold the vendor not responsible for the consequences. one-sixth share of the family properties for Rs. 70,000 and the sale deed which was executed in August 1894, contained a statement that a sum of Rs. 7,000 due on account of purchase money was not paid and that the same was reserved on account of a hypothecation bond to be executed by the vendee in favour of the vendor. In November 1894, the plaintiff obtained from the vendee a mortgage of some of the properties that formed the one-sixth share of the vendor. In December 1894, the vendee gave to the vendor a mortgage of some of the properties which formed originally part of the latter's share. Held that the plaintiff must be taken to have had notice that Rs. 7,000 of the sale amount remained unpaid and that the vendor-mortgagee had priority over the plaintiff. A co-parcener can alienate or get rid of his share to other co-parceners not necessarily to them all jointly but to one whom he chooses or to some out of the whole body. He can do this either by way of sale or by way of surrender. If the transaction takes the form of a sale and is for valuable consideration and if the other co-parcener accepts the transfer as a sale, there is no reason why the Court should not attach to the transaction, whether it is called a surrender or whether it is called a sale, the effect which the Transfer of Property Act gives to a sale. If it is a sale, then a charge under s. 55, Transfer of Property Act, attached to the whole of the property sold to the extent of Rs. 7,000. The statement in the sale-deed that the sum of Rs. 7,000 is reserved with the vendee in order that he may execute a hypothecation bond for that amount in favour of the vendor does not amount to a "contract to the contrary" within the meaning of s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act. The fact that the vendor took a subsequent mortgage did not put an end to the vendor's lien. It must be held under s. 101, Transfer of Property Act, for the benefit of the vendor who has a charge upon the property, that the charge was not merged in the mortgage. S. 81, Transfer of Property Act, applies only to cases where the plaintiff has no notice of the previous mortgage. LAKSHMANA IYER v. SANKARAMOORTHI PILLAYAN, 13 M.L.T. 364.

In September 1901, the mortgagor R entered into a contract with the plaintiff for sale of the entire mortgaged property for Rs. 80,000. Rs. 37,237 of which Rs. 28,000 were retained by the plaintiff to be paid to the mortgagee. In December, 1901, the plaintiff deposited the whole sum of Rs. 59,480 in Court for payment to the mortgagee, which sum was withdrawn from Court by the mortgagee in March 1902, and in pursuance of the agreement to sell made with the mortgagee in October, 1901, he brought a suit for specific performance of the contract of sale against R excluding from his claim the village B already purchased by the plaintiff and obtained a decree in 1903 as to the pattis in the four villages on payment of Rs. 37,763. The money was paid by the mortgagee into Court praying that it might be given to R on his executing the sale-deed. Prior to the aforesaid payment, plaintiff had informed the mortgagee, that he had paid Rs. 31,480 over and above the amount left with him by R for payment of the mortgage decree and either the said money should not be paid to R, or a notice given to the plaintiff of the deposit of the money in Court so that he might withdraw it therefrom himself. No notice of the deposit of the money was given to the plaintiff and the whole of the money was paid to R on his executing the sale-deed as to the pattis in favour of the mortgagee. The plaintiff then instituted this suit against the mortgagee for recovery of Rs. 31,480 plus interest by way of damages by sale of the property sold to the mortgagee on the ground that he had a charge to that extent on the said property. The mortgagee pleaded that the money was not a charge on the property purchased by him on the ground that the money towards the mortgage decree was not paid by the plaintiff himself but was paid by R and that it was not paid as mortgage money but as part of the purchase money. Held, that the plaintiff who had become the owner of a part of the mortgaged property and who paid off the mortgage debt in order to save the property from being sold in execution of the decree obtained on the basis of the mortgage of 1886, acquired a charge on the 4 pattis in respect of so much of the money as the pattis were rateably liable for.—Held, further, that the money having been supplied by the plaintiff for the payment of the mortgage decree, the payment must be considered to have been made by the plaintiff and it was quite immaterial that R and not the plaintiff deposited the money. Held, also, that even if the money paid by the plaintiff were considered as purchase money, he had a charge on the property sold to the mortgagee to the extent of the money paid by him under s. 55 (6) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). In his plaint, in the suit against the defendant, the plaintiff sought a decree for certain other land, belonging to the defendant, to replace the land from which he had been dispossessed. Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to take any land from the defendant in lieu of the land of which he had been deprived by the defendant's brother, but in the absence of a contract to the contrary, express or implied, the defendant was liable in damages for breach of the statutory covenant for title or the statutory covenant for quiet enjoyment. It may however be pointed out that, under S. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, the Court may order that a portion sufficient to discharge the plaintiff's debt be sold, and if the part not sold is sufficient, and if the plaintiff cannot possibly be prejudiced by such sale, it may be open to the Court to direct in the decree its sale before the other property. Further, in execution of a decree for the sale of all the lands, the lands not sold may be sold first, and if the sale-proceeds are sufficient to discharge the plaintiff's debt, the sale of the other lands may be stopped. Out of this sum Rs. 200 were paid at the time of execution of the conveyance; and the balance Rs. 200 V covenanted by the mortgage-deed to pay it to N, a prior mortgagee, V failed to make this payment; and G sold to R, on the 10th July, 1897, five out of the ten pieces of land (viz., Nos. 6-10) and some other property; and out of the sale-proceeds redeemed the mortgages to N. On the 15th March 1898, V paid Rs. 200 to G. A fortnight hence, that is, on the 30th March 1898, G mortgaged four pieces of land (i.e., Nos. 1, 3, 4, 5) to S for Rs. 400 In 1902, S sued G on his mortgage and, in execution of the decree for sale obtained therein, became purchaser through Court of the four pieces of land. In 1904, V's heirs (the plaintiffs) sued on their mortgage. The lower Courts gave them a decree treating their mortgage as one for Rs. 200 only instead of Rs. 400; and they further directed that, in the event of G's failing to pay the amount found due on the mortgage, the plaintiffs should first proceed against piece No. 2; and to bring to sale the pieces sold to R (Nos. 6 10) and to S (Nos. 1, 3, 4, 5) only in case the decree was not satisfied by a sale of the former. On second appeal: Held, upholding the decree, (1) that the plaintiffs were not entitled to treat their mortgage as one for Rs. 400; because, V not having paid Rs 200 to N as agreed upon, there was a partial failure of consideration of the mortgage-deed, and the subsequent payment of the amount could not serve in law to undo the effect of that failure so as to prejudice the rights of R. (2) That the Court had power, under s. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, to pass in such a suit a decree for sale, ordering that, in default of the defendant paying as mentioned in the decree, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof be sold. S. 56 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. applies only as between a seller and his buyer, not as between a mortgagee of the seller and the buyer. A mortgagee, who purchases mortgaged property in execution of his decree for sale on his mortgage, becomes a purchaser by estoppel, that is to say, he purchases the interest of both the mortgagor and the mortgagee. The defendant claimed exemption from assessment under two documents which released him from the payment, and which were passed by a predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff by way of reward for services, which the defendant had rendered or was expected to render him. The documents were neither stamped nor registered. The lower appellate Court treated the transaction as one of sale and, applying s. 56 (6) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, ordered the plaintiff to pay what the Court calculated to be the equivalent of purchase-money to the defendant before he recovered the assessment. Held, that the transaction must be regarded as one of gift, not sale; what was given in gift was regarded in Hindu Law as nibhanda, which is immoveable property; and there could be no gift of immoveable property except by a registered instrument, signed by or on behalf of the donor and attested by at least two witnesses. S. 58 specifies three instances of mortgage by conditional sale, and a document described as "Meddatu Krayam," which is defined as "Land, mortgaged with option to the lender to consider it as his property if the mortgage is not redeemed within a stipulated period, seems to fall under the first kind of mortgage by conditional sale specified in the section. The test to apply is whether the relation of debtor and creditor subsists between the parties. If the relation does not exist, then the transaction does not fall within the general definition of a mortgage in s. 58 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, and, therefore, cannot be regarded as a mortgage by conditional sale within s. 58 (c). (12 A. 387, 17 I.A. 98, F.) Where the lower Court has not duly considered the law applicable to the matter and has committed an error which goes to the root of the matter, the Court has acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction and the High Court would be justified in interfering in revision. Plaintiff, the assignee from the vendor, sued for redemption of the land on the footing that the transaction amounted to a mortgage by conditional sale. It was found that there was no great disparity between the sale amount and the actual value of the land sold Held that the mere circumstance that interest was stipulated for by the parties did not by itself indicate that the document which apparently was a sale was intended to be a mortgage. Except the mention of interest, there was no indication of an intention to create a mortgage security. The finding as to the value of the property showed the intention of the parties. (459)—S. 58 (e)—English mortgage, essentials of.—The three essentials of an "English mortgage," as defined in s. 58 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act, are (1) that the mortgagor should bind himself to repay the mortgage money on a certain day, (2) that the property mortgagad should be transferred absolutely to the mortgagee, and (3) that such absolute transfer should be made subject to a proviso that the mortgagee will reconvey the property to the mortgagor upon payment by him of the mortgage money on the day on which the mortgagor bound himself to repay the same. Where a mortgage recited that "the mortgagors hereby mortgage and assign to the mortgagee" the mortgaged property, held that the second requisite of the definition of "English mortgage" was fulfilled by the assignment. Clauses Consolidation)—Immoveable property—Equity of redemption—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 295.—Regard being had to the definition of "Immoveable property" in s. 2, cl. 5, Act I of 1868 (corresponding to s. 3, cl. 25, Act X of 1897), the words "Immoveable property" mentioned in s. 58, Transfer of Property Act, denote not only the property itself as distinguished from any equity of redemption which the mortgagor might at the time possess in the said property, but include the rights of the mortgagor in the property mortgaged at the time of the second mortgage or, in other words, his equity of redemption in such property. So, a second mortgage and a first mortgage are mortgages of specific immoveable property within the meaning of s. 58, and a second mortgagee is entitled in a suit to which the prior mortgagee is a party, to obtain a decree ordering a sale of the mortgaged property subject to the lien of the prior encumbrancer. property with the consent of the other heirs, and they, in 1910 executed a deed of mortgage acknowledging and renewing the terms of the document of 1892. In 1893, the husband of the defendant had executed a simple mortgage of the same property and the assignees of that mortgage now sued for sale on foot of their mortgage. The defendant pleaded that the deed of 1892 was a mortgage-deed and it was kept alive by an acknowledgment contained in the mortgage of 1910 and had therefore priority over the mortgage sued on. Held, that the question whether a document was or was not a mortgage must be decided in each case with reference to the intention of the parties conveyed by the terms of that document; that the mere use of the words "arh" and "mustaghrak" did not necessarily imply that there was an intention to give a power of sale and of creating a mortgage; and that there was nothing in the terms of the deed of 1892 to indicate that the parties ever intended that the property should be sold, and the document therefore did not create a mortgage but only a charge. Held, further that a mortgage is kept alive by an acknowledgment of the debt due on it embodied, in a subsequent mortgage-deed executed within the period of grace allowed by s. 31 of the Limitation Act. In case of default the annuitants were to take possession of a portion of it sufficient to give them the stipulated income. The plaintiff sued on the bond as if it were a mortgage. Held: the words "makful" and "mustaghrak" used in the bond, in view of the other terms and conditions, did not necessarily create a mortgage, nor was a power of sale necessarily implied unless the parties clearly contemplated that it should, and there could be no mortgage which could never be redeemed at all. Held also: that the document in suit was, under the circumstances of the case, a charge and not a mortgage. Held further: that the suit having been framed as one for mortgage with a prayer for the sale of the property, no decree could in second appeal be passed for the arrears of twelve years' annuity, as it would necessitate the trial of the issues as to whether the charge subsisted and the plaintiff had a title to the annuity and would involve a complete change in the frame of the suit and the pleadings. (485)—S. 59—Attestation of mortgage-deed, evidence relating to—Burden of proof—Applicability of maxim 'Omnia rite esse acta.—Suit for foreclosure. Some of the original mortgagors admitted, while others denied, execution of the mortgage-deed sued on. The first Court threw, on the plaintiff, the burden of proving the mortgage to be a valid one. The attesting witnesses were examined and they deposed that they saw the executants sign and that they attested the document but they were disbelieved by that Court, which, therefore, held the deed to be operative merely as a simple money bond. The plaintiff appealed and the Divisional Judge held that, as the execution of the deed had been proved and the attestation was one prima facie duly made it should be presumed valid unless there was definite evidence showing the contrary and that, as the burden of proof lay on the defendants and they had not satisfactorily discharged it, plaintiffs were entitled to obtain the foreclosure decree prayed for. On second appeal, it was further contended in support of the mortgagees that, s. 70 of the Indian Evidence Act is inconsistent with their being required to do more than prove execution by the mortgagor of a deed, which purports, on its face, to have been attested but that contention was overruled on the ground that there was no such inconsistency since the execution of a deed, to whose validity attestation is essential, designates the whole operation, including both the signature of the party and the attestation of the subscribing witnesses and s. 70 of the Indian Evidence Act lays down no rule as to the burden of proof, but, in a particular class of cases, makes proof of partial execution adequate as proof of complete execution. Held, also, that, where there is evidence on both sides as to the factum of attestation, the maxim "omnia rite esse acta" can only be resorted to, if at all, when the evidence on both sides is evenly balanced. The maxim operates when there is no evidence on either side, and possibly it may be used to eke out unconvincing testimony on one side only. In the present case, therefore, the decree of the lower appellate Court was reversed, since it had erroneously proceeded as if the maxim compelled the mortgagors to show that the attesting witnesses could not have seen the mortgagors sign the mortgage-deed. It is not necessary that the witnesses should put their mark at the deed themselves, any such mark on the deed not being implied in the word "attest." "To attest" means only to witness the execution of a deed and there is nothing to preclude the signatures of the witnesses, as in this case, from coming under the heading of attestation. Per Mookerjee, J.—"To attest" is to bear witness to a fact, and it is not necessary that the witness attesting a document should sign his name personally. A signature, as contemplated by s. 59 of the Act, need not be by the mortgagor personally but, may be by some person acting on his behalf and under his authority. If the mortgagor is illiterate, it is a good signature, if, in the presence and at the request of the mortgagor, some other person signs the mortgagor's name on his behalf, as executant of the deed. (1899, A.W.N. 116, overruled.) Held by Aikman, J., (dissenting) :—Whether or not the autograph signature of the executant is required to any particular document, is usually a question of construction to be decided separately in each case. In the case of a mortgage executed in accordance with the provisions of s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, the law requires the personal signature of the mortgagor. (N.B.—The case law on the point is fully discussed in the judgment in this case.) (20 W.R. 375, 8 W. The two sections deal with different matters, and therefore, the language used in one of them cannot, according to ordinary rules of construction, be "looked at as a guide to the construction of the other." In the next place, the words "on behalf of" in s. 123 are a surplusage. Further, to hold that the legislature requires that the personal signature of the mortgagor is indispensable in the case of a mortgage which is only the transfer of an interest in immoveable property, while it does not require the same in the case of a gift or sale whereby the vendor's immoveable property is absolutely transferred is an anomaly, and a construction which leads to such an anomaly should not be adopted. The effect will depend upon the circumstances of each individual case. [R., 31 A. 373=6 A.L.J. 451 ; D., 24 M 96.] Although property may be sold subject to a mortgage, and the mortgagee himself may purchase the mortgagor's equity of redemption in whole or in part, either by private sale or at auction in execution of a decree, still, in such cases, certain equities arise between the mortgagee or his representative in interest on the one hand and the mortgagor or the mortgagor's representative in interest on the other, to which a Court is bound, as a Court administering justice and equity, to give effect. One of those equities is that the mortgagee by so purchasing, should not place the mortgagor in a worse position than that in which the mortgagor would have been, had any other person purchased the property. Such mortgagee is liable to bear a rateable share of the debt in cases falling under s. 82 of the Transfer of Property Act. Also, when property is sold subject to a mortgage, the price which the purchaser pays for it being ordinarily the difference between the market value of the property and the amount due on the mortgage, if the mortgagee himself happens to be the purchaser, and the price paid by him is not the full market value of the property, he should not be allowed to keep in his pocket the difference between the market value and the price paid by him and thereby damnify the mortgagor or other owner of the remainder of the mortgaged property. That is the reason why the mortgagee must bring into account the value of the property purchased by himself. As a result of his doing so, the mortgage may, in some instances, be found to have been fully discharged by his purchase. (Per Banerji, J.). NAND KISHORE v. RAJA HARI RAJ SINGH, 20 A. 23 F. A stipulation in the mortgage-deed, by which, on payment of the principal, interest and costs, the mortgagor is not to recover possession, but is bound to allow the mortgagee to continue in possession apparently in perpetuity upon payment of a fixed rent, prevents the mortgagor from getting the property unfettered, and is thus a clog on equity of redemption. (530)—S. 60—Suit for redemption—Averment in plaint of payment of mortgage amount and of willingness to pay amount due—Effect of non-tender or non-payment.—A mortgagor seeking redemption may assert that the mortgage has been paid off, but that, if it be found by the Court that anything is due under the mortgage, he is prepared to pay it. Such an alternative case is not opposed to any rule of pleading, and there is really no inconsistency. Under s. 60, Transfer of Property Act, the non-payment or non-tender of the amount due on the mortgage previous to suit is not a bar to a suit for redemption. BUTCHANNA v. VARAHALU, 24 M. 408.

(531)—S. 60—Receipt of part of principal money before time—No premature right to foreclosure or redeem.—The words in s. 60, Transfer of Property Act "at any time after the principal money has become payable" refer to the time agreed on for the payment of the mortgage money. The receipt of a portion of the principal money before that time does not give a right to redeem prematurely any more than it gives a right to foreclose prematurely. The mortgagee is not entitled to foreclose because he is kept out of possession. Even, if he were so entitled, it does not follow that the mortgagor may, if the mortgagee does not sue for foreclosure, claim to redeem before the date agreed on. The mortgagor cannot by breaking the agreement to deliver possession acquire a right to break it still further by redeeming before the fixed date. BHAGWANGIR GOSAI v. PHAGU KIRAR, 2 C. On 13th June, 1892, 25th March, 1894, and 15th October 1895, they borrowed further sums. The deeds of those dates were registered and recited that the aforesaid property was held upon usufructuary mortgage by the plaintiff under the deed of July 16th, 1891, that the sums now borrowed should be paid with interest within the time fixed in the original mortgage-deed, and that the mortgagors should not be able to redeem the mortgage without payment of the amount due on the three subsequent deeds. The plaintiff brought a suit to foreclose his mortgage claiming the amount, due under all five deeds.

The defendants admitted that the money secured by the deed of July 16th 1891, was due, but denied that the last three deeds created any further charge on the property. Held (per Wells, A.J.C.) that the three last deeds, which practically amounted to fresh mortgages were not a clog on the equity of redemption and having regard to ss 60 and 61 of the Act, the plaintiff could enforce them against the defendants. The principle on which the prohibition of clogging mortgages is based is one of equity, that, when a man is borrowing and pressed for money, he may not have to assent to unreasonable terms, and, therefore, in the mortgage-deed, there must not be any provision, which fetters his right to redeem. But this principle does not apply to a case where a man has deliberately increased the amount of the mortgage-money by taking further loans, and equity will not deprive the mortgagee of his dues. Held (per Scott, J.C.) that the three last deeds did not create mortgages or practically amount to fresh mortgages, but that, having regard to the provisions of s. 60 of the Act, they did not clog or fetter the defendants' equity of redemption and could be enforced. (536)—Ss. 60, 61—Mortgage—Redemption in part—When allowed—Claim for consolidation of mortgages — Essentials.—Where there are more mortgagees than one, but only one of them has acquired in part the share of a mortgagor, it is clear that the exception to s. 60, Transfer of Property Act, does not apply, and the plaintiff is entitled to redeem the whole mortgage. The rule is that a mortgage is one and indivisible and the exception arises only when the mortgagee, or, if there are more mortgagees than one, all such mortgagees have acquired in whole or in part the share of mortgagor. In order to support a claim for the consolidation of two mortgages, that is to say, to treat them as one and insist that one shall not be redeemed without the other, it is necessary both under s. 61, Transfer of Property Act, and otherwise, that the two mortgages to be consolidated should have become united in title or come into the same hand. B. sued M.M. for possession of the mortgaged property, which was decreed to him on payment of Rs. 4,000, the principal sum. On appeal, the Commissioner held that H. B. could redeem the mortgage on payment of Rs. 4,000

before 1st Asarh 1264 Fasli (8th June 1857). H.B. paid Rs.4,000 into the Government Treasury on the 30th April 1857. R. M. appealed to the Financial Commissioner against the judgment of the Commissioner. A few weeks after the money was deposited the rebellion of 1857 broke out, the Treasury was plundered, the money was lost, and all the records of the Courts including those of the Financial Commissioner were destroyed. M. M's appeal was not decided after the suppression of the rebellion. The second summary settlement of the mortgaged property was made with M. M. H. B. having died, one of his sons, M.B., sued the defendant for possession of the property, and his suit was finally dismissed. The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant for redemption of his share of that property. Held, that when the mortgagor sues for redemption of the mortgage or for possession of the mortgaged property, the amount due on the mortgage having been paid, the mortgage cannot be said to have been redeemed until, in the one case, the mortgagor has obtained a decree enforcing the right to redeem, and has paid into Court the amount found due on the mortgage,or, in the other, has obtained a decree establishing his right to possession of the mortgaged property. Assuming that it was proved that H. B. obtained a decree enforcing his right to redeem and that the payment he made was one of the amount due on the mortgage, held, that the payment constituted redemption of the mortgage according to the law (similar to that laid down in ss. 60 and 62, Transfer of Property Act) in force in Oudh, when the decree was made. The right to redeem a mortgage is enforced under the Transfer of Property Act, when in a suit for redemption the Court decrees that, upon the mortgagor paying into Court the amount found due on the mortgage, the mortgagee shall do what is required of him by s. 60, or what is required of him by s. 62, and the amount so found due is paid into Court. When such a decree has been passed and the money has been paid, the right to redeem has been enforced, and therefore the mortgage has been redeemed. Held further, that the payment made by H.B. was one of the amount due on the mortgage, that he could obtain possession of the mortgaged property in execution of his decree, and that he could not neglect to execute his decree and bring a second suit for possession of the property on the same ground. Held, therefore, that the plaintiff's suit was barred by ss. 13 and 244, Civ. Pro. Code. AHMAD BAKHSH v. THE HON'BLE SETH RAGHUBER DAYAL, 3 O.C. 371 B.

properties, the mortgagee paid the amount of the lien into Court and thus saved the property from sale. On the death of the mortgagee, his undivided brother sued to recover the amount advanced to pay off the prior lien. The suit was against the purchaser of the property from the mortgagor. Held that the payment not having been made at the request or for the benefit of the defendant, the plaintiff could only succeed by showing that he had a charge upon the land which could be enforced against it in the hands of the defendant. There is no provision in the Transfer of Property Act to support the contention that, without the knowledge or concurrence on the part of the mortgagor, a second mortgagee may, by a transaction between himself and the first mortgagee, acquire a new right over the property. The plaintiff not having acquired any such charge on the property, the suit failed. Per Subramania Ayyar, J. No doubt a mortgagee can tack to the mortgage amount any sum paid by him to save the mortgaged property from sale. But the plaintiff was purely a usufructuary mortgagee and did not obtain possession of the mortgaged property. Consequently, he had no charge on the mortgaged property for the money recoverable by him under s. 68 of the Transfer of Property Act. The amount to be added thereto necessarily stood also on the same footing, and the plaintiff's contention that he had a charge for it also was clearly unsustainable. PERIANNA SERVAIGARAN v. The first deed was dated the 9th August 1887, and purported to have been executed in consideration of Rs. 10,360, which was to be paid in a lump sum into the treasury at Nanpara within eight years. It was further stipulated that, on failure to pay the amount on the due date, interest would be payable at the rate of eight annas per cent. per mensem from the date of the deed till date of payment. The second deed was dated the 3rd October 1888, corresponding to 13th Kuar Badi 1296 Fasli, and provided for the payment of Rs. 26,000, without interest, within a period of ten years beginning with 1296 Fasli and ending with 1305 Fasli, but there was a further clause to the effect that, after the expiry of this period, in the fallow season or on the 1st Jeth 1305 Fasli the sum advanced would be paid into the treasury at Nanpara in a lump sum, and on failure interest at the rate of Re. 1 per cent. per mensem would be payable from the date of the deed till realization. The third and fourth deeds were executed on the same terms as the second for the repayment of the money advanced without interest. The defendant deposited Rs. 10,360 on the 6th August 1895, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bahraich, under s. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, on account of the mortgage of the 9th August 1887, but the plaintiff refused to receive it. On the 23rd May 1898, Rs. 40,860 were similarly deposited on account of all four mortgages and this also the plaintiff declined to accept. In his suit against the defendant the plaintiff claimed interest on the first mortgage on the ground that although the deposit was made within the stipulated period the terms of the agreement required payment to be made in the treasury at Nanpara. It was also contended that interest was due on the other mortgages also, inasmuch as the payment of the amounts due on them was not made until after the 1st Jeth 1305 Fasli, although made before the end of that year and no payment was made at Nanpara. Held, that the deposit made on account of the first deed was a good payment and the plaintiff was not entitled to interest. A mortgagee may, after the mortgage has become payable and before his right to redeem is barred, either (1) pay or tender at the proper time and place the amount due on the mortgage under s. 60, or (2) deposit that amount in Court under s. 84, or (3) sue for redemption under s. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act. Held, further, that, as regards the second mortgage, the contract must be held to be contained in the first clause of the deed, viz., that the loan was for ten years beginning with 1296 Fasli and ending with 1305 Fasli, and that the amount of the bond was to be paid on the expiry of that period ; and that the second clause, which was to the effect that the money was to be paid on the 1st Jeth 1305, was merely explanatory of the first. Where there are two inconsistent passages in a document the first should be given effect to in preference to the second. Held, therefore, that the date up to which the amounts of the second, third and fourth deeds could be paid was the last day of 1305 Fasli, which was a considerable time subsequent to the date on which the deposit of Rs. 40,860 was made by the defendant in the Civil Court at Bahraich under s. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act for payment to the plaintiff, who therefore was entitled to no interest. (542)—Ss. 60, 83, 95—Simple-bond insisting in payment before redemption of mortgage—Clog on the equity of redemption—Effect of payment under s. 83—Rights of part-owners of equity of redemption.—Plaintiff, as the purchaser of a portion of an equity of redemption, sued for possession of the whole of the mortgaged property having previously deposited in Court, under s. 83 of this Act, the whole of the amount due under the mortgage. The suit for possession was necessitated by the fact of the mortgagee having refused to accept the amount. The mortgagee's objection was that, after the execution of the mortgage, the mortgagor gave him (the mortgagee) a simple-bond for another sum of money stipulating therein that the mortgage should not be redeemed before the payment of simple-bond, that therefore, he had a charge on the mortgaged property for the amount of the simple-bond and that, therefore, possession ought not to be decreed to the plaintiff. To this suit, the purchaser of the other portion of the equity of redemption was also made a party-defendant. His contention was that he was entitled to redeem a proportionate part of the mortgaged property by paying up a portion of the mortgage-amount, which represented his share. He, also, sought to be made a co-plaintiff, to which the original plaintiff objected. Held, (1) the simple-bond was a clog or fetter on the equity of redemption and did not create any charge on the property. It cannot be enforced, since it places, in the way of the mortgagor, a bar to the exercise of his right of redemption (26 A. 559, F.) and (2) that, when the plaintiff paid into Court, the amount which, admittedly, was the full amount due under the mortgage, the effect of the payment was to satisfy the mortgage and discharge it fully. Thenceforth, there was no subsisting mortgage and nothing for the owner of the other portion of the equity of redemption to redeem. The plaintiff was, as owner of a portion of the equity of redemption, entitled to redeem the whole mortgage. The other owner was not entitled to redeem a portion of the mortgage by paying a proportionate part of the mortgage-amount; nor was there any mortgage subsisting at the date he was made a party to the suit. S. 61 also implies..as is shown by the illustration—that, if there are different mortgages in favour of one and the same person, not in respect of different properties, but the same property, the mortgagor cannot seek to redeem any one mortgage without redeeming the additional mortgages also. The same principle will be equally applicable to a mortgagee having several mortgages over the same property seeking to obtain an order for sale on one mortgage only. Per Krishnaswami Aiyar, J.:—Obiter—There is nothing opposed to any principle of law that there should be a charge created on the happening of a condition, where the condition itself is first stipulated and the condition happens afterwards. His proper course is to sue in respect of the whole property mortgaged and for the whole mortgage-debt, and then if his co-mortgagee refuses to join as a plaintiff to apply to the Court to have him brought on to the record as a defendant. (568)—S. 67—Usufructuary mortgage—The mortgage money payable after a given number of years—Order for sale.—On the 26th of October, 1893, the defendant executed in favour of plaintiff a usufructuary mortgage, which provided that the money borrowed was repayable in two years from its date. In 1907, the plaintiff sued to recover the mortgage debt by sale of the mortgaged property. The lower Courts held that, as the mortgage was usufructuary, no order for sale could be passed. Held, that the mortgage was not a purely usufructuary mortgage, but was one in which the mortgage money had become payable by the mortgagor, and, therefore, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagee had the right, under s. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, to an order that the property be sold. When the mortgagee instituted the suit, the Tr. P. Act was in force; it was the only law under which the suit could be instituted and dealt with, and it must be assumed that it was instituted under s. 67 of that Act, and that the decree for sale was made under that Act. (588)—Ss. 67, 88, 99—Suit by mortgagee to recover money paid to discharge Government Revenue due on mortgage property—No provision in decree for sale of mortgage property—Construction.—The mortgagee of a palayam sued to recover moneys paid by him for the discharge of Government revenue assessed on the palayam. The decree that was passed in the suit was not expressed in the language prescribed by s. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, though the plaintiff had acquired, under s. 35 of Act II of 1864, a charge on the palayam for moneys paid by him. The decree, however, conferred on the plaintiff a right to proceed against the estate also. In execution, the defendant contended that the decree was merely a decree for money and not a decree for sale. Held that the decree was in substance a decree for sale, as the words "the plaintiff do recover the amount sued for by means of his (defendant's) estate," when taken with the plaint, could not have been intended to mean any thing else. The decree in effect directed a sale of the palayam. SYED MEER HUSSAIN v. SUBBARAMAPPA, 5 M.L.J. 230.

(589)—Ss. 67, 90—Irregularities in execution sale, waiver of—Waiver, how made—What was waived, how inferred—Abandonment of legal objection by pleadings—Estoppel.—When, in an execution-proceeding, a point of law was decided by a Court against a party and the decision on the point was not challenged on appeal, the decision is binding upon the party against whom it was made and the same question cannot be re-opened in a subsequent proceeding. (8 C. 51, 8 I.A. 123, P.C., Rel. on.) In order to determine whether the judgment-debtor waived all irregularities in the service of the previous sale proclamation, as also the issue of a fresh sale proclamation, the Court must look not merely to the petition of the judgment-debtor waiving such irregularities but to the whole proceeding in the case and particularly to the order made by the Court upon that petition. When, in a petition for postponement of sale, the judgment-debtor said that, if the sale be stayed as prayed, he would raise no objection on the ground of irregularities in the publication of the sale proclamation and the Court granted the adjournment as prayed for, on condition of the judgment-debtor paying Rs. 200 as compensation to the decree-holder and directed that the sale should take place on the adjourned date without fresh sale proclamation, and the judgment-debtor accepted these additional terms imposed upon him by the Court. Held, by the express terms of the petition, the judgment-debtor waived all irregularities in the publications of the sale proclamations already issued and from the fact that he raised no objection to the order passed, it must be inferred that he waived the issue of a fresh sale proclamation. The judgment-debtor could not now impugn the validity of the sale on the ground that the sale proclamation was not served in proper time and in due manner according to the provisions of the law. favour of the plaintiffs in the present suit. M filed a second appeal to the High Court. A executed the decree of the first appellate Court and, pending second appeal purchased the property in execution and continued in possession. Held, that, under the circumstances, so far as regards the suit for redemption, plaintiff's mortgagors did all that could be done to resist A's getting possession, and that there was no default on their part within cl. It was provided by the mortgage that interest at the rate of nine per cent a year should be paid half-yearly, and should, if not so paid, be added to the principal and bear interest at the same rate. Held, that under s. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act the Courts are bound to give a decree at the rate of interest provided by the mortgage if it be a rate to which no valid legal objections can be taken, and that interest must be computed up to the day fixed by the Court for payment. Held also, that the provision for the payment of compound interest must be enforced, not being in the nature of a penalty and there being no question of fraud or oppression, improper dealing, exorbitant amount, dealing with an ignorant person, or any such consideration. Held therefore, that the appellant was entitled to interest at the rate stipulated in the mortgage-deed and to compound interest up to the date fixed by the decree for payment. Held, further, that ss. 86 and 88 of the Transfer of Property Act neither exclude nor authorise the awarding of interest after the date fixed by the decree for payment; but that in making a decree for sale under the Transfer of Property Act, the Court may, under s. 209, Civ. (636)—Ss. 8 and 70—Leose-hold property—Free-hold property—Renewal of mortgaged property.—The Transfer of Property Act, 1882, makes no distinction between free-hold and lease-hold property for the purposes of the rule of law embodied in ss. 8 and 70 of the Act. In this respect the Act reproduces the English law, which is that all things which are annexed to the property mortgaged are part of the mortgage security and therefore the deed need contain no mention of structures or fixtures unless a contrary intention be collected from the deed. Hence, where a mortgagor subsequent to the date of the mortgage pulled down a building standing upon the piece of land mortgaged and erected a new structure in its place, it was held that the new structure would be included in the mortgage unless there was contract to the contrary. (639)—S. 72—Mortgage—Redemption—Mortgagee paying a simple money decree to save mortgaged property from sale — Charge— Malikana—Condition for recovery by separate suit—Set-off in account.—A property in the possession of certain usufructuary mortgagees was put up for sale in execution of a decree on a simple money bond of a prior date. The mortgagees paid up that decree, and prevented the sale. Held, that the mortgage being made after the date of the simple money bond, the mortgagees had an interest in protecting the mortgaged property from sale and were entitled to recover the amount of the simple money decree paid to save the property from sale, when subsequently the mortgagors sought to redeem the property. In the mortgage deed the mortgagees had covenanted to pay Rs. 1,000 as malikana to the mortgagors. This was alleged not to have been paid up to the day the suit for redemption was brought. Held, that the mortgagors were entitled to the malikana allowance which should be credited to them in taking the accounts. The fact that under the terms of the deed the malikana could be recovered by a separate suit would not prevent its being set-off at the time of redemption. Where only some of the mortgagors executed further mortgages in favour of the mortgagees covenanting to pay the mortgage debts with the money payable on the prior mortgage, held that this would not preclude the mortgagors as a body from exercising their right to redeem the earlier mortgage only. (643)—S. 72—Usufructuary mortgage—Mortgagee granting lease of property to mortgagor—Construction of deeds.—A usufructuary mortgagee, instead of taking possession of the mortgaged property, granted a lease of it to the mortgagor, the rent reserved being equivalent to the interest payable on the mortgage calculated at the rate of 11 as. per cent. per annum; both the deeds were registered on the same date; in the mortgage deed reference was made to the lease, and the latter referred to the former; and the lease was terminable with the mortgage and not before. Held that all the circumstances clearly indicate that the mortgage and the lease form one transaction, viz., that of a usufructuary mortgage, the lease providing the manner in which the usufruct was to be taken in lieu of interest; that the relation of the parties was, therefore, that of mortgagor and mortgagee; that any rights and liabilities arising under the lease must be considered as arising out of that relation; and therefore, the mortgage was not redeemable under s. 72 of the Transfer of Property Act without payment of all arrears of lease money due to the mortgagee. (645)—S. 72—Property hypothecated sold in execution of a simple money decree—Sale likely to imperil mortgagor's security—Usufructuary mortgagee when not entitled to mortgage money nor to a personal decree.—The plaintiff was the mortgagee in possession of certain plots of land. Subsequent to the mortgage the said plots were attached and proclaimed for sale in execution of a simple money decree against the mortgagor. On plaintiff's objection the plots were ordered to be sold subject to his lien. The plaintiff thereafter paid the decretal money and filed the present suit against his mortgagor for recovery of the money paid with interest. Held, that, s. 72 of the Transfer of Property Act is intended to apply to cases where the forfeiture or sale is likely to imperil the mortgagor's security. Held further that, if the plaintiff exercised his right by virtue of his having been a usufructuary mortgagee, that money became a part and parcel of the mortgage money and he was not entitled to a personal decree for that amount. (646)—S. 72 (a and b)—Redemption—Rights of mortgagee with possession as regards improvements made by him—Damages for planting of groves by tenants with mortgagee's permission, claim against mortgagee for—Mortgage improvements.—Under a deed of mortgage with possession, the mortgagee was put into possession of the mortgaged property and by the terms of the mortgage-deed was entitled to appropriate the entire profits in lieu of interest. There was a covenant between the parties that the mortgagor should be entitled to redeem and regain possession of the mortgaged property at the end of five years or subsequently on payment of the whole principal sum together with the arrears of advances to tenants (taqavi), the cost of building new houses for tenants and other miscellaneous expenses such as advances of seed grain. The plaintiff having purchased the property from the mortgagor brought a suit for redemption. The Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff was entitled to redemption on payment of the principal sum secured by the mortgage less certain sums on account of damages caused to the mortgaged property by the planting of groves by tenants and others in a number of plots of land with the mortgagee's permission, but allowed certain sums on account of cost of embankment, sinking wells, erecting houses for tenants, reclaiming barren land and survey. Held, that as the mortgage-deed contained a distinct contract regarding the sums payable to the mortgagee on redemption, he was not entitled to add to the principal money any other sums spent by him for the improvement of the property under s. 72, cls. (a) and (b) of the Transfer of Property Act; (26 C. 1, P.C., 19 M. 327, R.) that his claim to costs incurred for building houses for tenants was rightly allowed; and that the plaintiff's claim to damages for the planting of groves could not be maintained. The mortgagee, A, obtained a decree on his mortgages in a suit in which the putnidar B was made a party. After the decree the estate was sold for arrears of revenue subject to the encumbrance of the putni. The mortgagee withdrew the surplus sale-proceeds in part satisfaction of his decree, and for the unsatisfied balance applied for sale of the putni interest. Held, that s. 73 of the Transfer of Property Act, by providing that the mortgage-lien is to be transferred to the surplus sale-proceeds, did not relieve the putni from liability to sale in satisfaction of the mortgage-decree. A mortgagee is not bound, upon receipt of notice of an application for registration of an incumbrance under s. 41 of Act XI of 1859, to oppose such application. Quære: Whether such opposition by a mortgagee would be a sufficient ground for the rejection of the application by the revenue officer. Plaintiffs instituted a suit on their mortgages and in execution of the decree obtained by them brought the mortgaged property to sale and one of them purchased it. The usufructuary mortgagee was not a party to the suit. Plaintiffs now sued praying that the usufructuary mortgagee might be ordered to pay them the amount of the decree and that in default of such payment he might be absolutely debarred of his right to redeem the prior mortgages and be directed to surrender possession of the property to plaintiffs. Held that, the puisne mortgagee not having been made a party to the suit, his right under s. 74 of the Transfer of Property Act to redeem the prior mortgages was not affected by either the decree or sale. The only effect of the sale was to transfer to the purchaser, one of the plaintiffs, the equity of redemption of the mortgagor. The puisne mortgagee, however, could not be in a better position than he would have been, if he had been made a party to the suit. He could not claim a decree for sale of the property. The puisne mortgagee then sued the prior mortgagee claiming possession of the property purchased by the latter on payment of the actual purchase money or of the sum which was due upon his mortgage at the date of the institution of his (prior mortgagee's) suit. Held that the puisne mortgagee was entitled to be put into possession on payment to the prior mortgagee of the sum which was actually due upon the prior mortgage at the date upon which the prior mortgagees purchased. Non-registration would not of itself be gross negligence as the law allows four months, but it is a reason for extra caution. Also where the title deeds were on the face of them all, in order, and there was nothing to excite the suspicion of the subsequent mortgagee, that there was a prior incumbrance, he would be entitled to priority over such incumbrance. The words "gross neglect" in s. 78 of the Transfer of Property Act need not necessarily be read by the light of the English decisions. When a first mortgagee allows the title-deeds for nearly four years after his mortgage to be in the possession

(633)—S. 78—Existence of gross negligence —Failure of prior mortgagee to get possession of title-deed—Delay in registration.—The existence of gross negligence, within the meaning of s. 78 of the Act, must be determined according to the circumstances of each case, and one of the circumstances to be taken into consideration is that, in this country, universal registration exists. Failure on the part of a prior mortgagee to get possession of title-deeds is not, therefore, in the absence of reasonable explanation, necessarily to be imputed to him as gross negligence. (2 C.W.N. 750, F.; 18 B. 444, R.; 12 M. 429, 13 M. 393. 12 M. 424, 15 M. 268, 4 M.H.C. 369, D.) Delay in getting the mortgage registered, which had the effect of enabling the mortgagor to effect a second mortgage, would not make the prior mortgagee's failure to obtain the possession of title-deeds amount in law to gross negligence. On the 28th September, 1900, the mortgagors took a lease from the mortgagees of a certain property and executed a security bond to secure the due performance by them of their engagement to pay rent. The two documents were registered on the 11th October, 1900. As the lessees defaulted in paying rent, the landlords sued to recover rent as also for the enforcement of the security, and joined, as defendants, several persons, and among them a mortgagee under a bond of the 12th October, 1900, on the allegation that they had acquired an interest in the properties given by the lessees by way of security. A decree was obtained on the 13th March, 1907, allowing the claim for priority by the landlords over the mortgage of the 12th October, 1900. Held, that the security bond of the 28th September was not entitled to priority over the mortgage of the 12th October, as the puisne incumbrancer had no notice of the prior mortgage, except to the extent that the matter was res judicata by virtue of the decree of the 13th March, 1907, in respect of the sum then in controversy. A Court will not extend the doctrine of constructive res judicata beyond the subject-matter of the particular litigation. A puisne mortgagee, as holder of a fragment of the equity of redemption, cannot be held personally responsible for the payment of the mortgage-debt which is primarily payable by the mortgagor. There was an earlier mortgage of the property in favour of B under a mortgage-deed dated 26-6-1872, and subsequently a third mortgage dated 17-1-1874 in favour of the defendant, who, on 21-6-1875, paid off B's mortgage. The present suit was, thereupon, brought by the plaintiff for recovering the amount due under the bond of 2-1-1873 by enforcing the lien against the suit property. The defendant contended that, by reason of his having paid off the mortgage of B, he was entitled to priority over the plaintiff in respect of the amount paid off. Held that the defendant was not entitled to such priority. He cannot defeat the prior lien of the plaintiff by the device of paying off the mortgage of B and affecting to hold it as a shield against other incumbrances in the sense of s. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). The plaintiff now sues on his subsequent mortgage and insists that the prior mortgagees should not have allowed the co-mortgagor to retain Rs. 150 out of the sale-proceeds of the other house sold. The houses being of equal value, each house should bear only a moiety of the burden under s. 82 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Besides seeking to enforce the ordinary remedies of mortgagees against their mortgagors and against the property comprised in the mortgage they claimed on the principle of contribution to charge any balance which might still remain due to them against the other property which, with the property comprised in their own mortgage, was included in the prior mortgage. Held that plaintiffs had no right of contribution and the other property stood free from any lien. Even if the plaintiffs' claim were maintainable, it ought not to have been joined with the ordinary claim on the mortgage. Held also that the plaintiffs' claim on the mortgage was not affected by the purchase by them of a part of the property mortgaged to them in execution of the decree on the prior mortgage. The sale conferred on them an absolute right to the property purchased by them, and it did not deprive them of their mortgage right. SESHA AYYAR v. C did not redeem D, who subsequently obtained a decree on foot of his mortgage, and upon the property being sold in execution, C purchased the same in the name of E. Held that the integrity of the mortgage in favour of C was broken up, and A's representatives were entitled to redeem the portion of the mortgaged property upon payment of a proportionate amount of the mortgage-money. A's share being under s. 82, Act IV of 1882, liable only for its own quota of the debt, C could not throw the whole burden upon it and claim that D's property had been sold to discharge a prior mortgage, inasmuch as it was C's wrongful conduct which led to that sale. The plaintiff, a simple-money-decree-holder against the mortgagors, sold a two-third share of one of the villages in execution of his decree and purchased it himself. To protect the property from being sold in execution of the mortgage-decree obtained by the mortgagee in a subsequent suit for foreclosure, the plaintiff discharged the mortgage-debt in full. The plaintiff brought the present suit claiming contribution from the other village and contended that the time, at which the two villages comprised in the mortgage were to be valued for the purpose of contribution, was the date when he purchased a share of one village and not the date of the mortgage as urged by the appellant. Held, that, having regard to the present tense used throughout the section and the provision, "that in calculating the value of the properties the amount of any other incumbrance to which any property may be subject at the date of the mortgage is to be deducted from the value of such property," the section contemplates that properties are to be liable to contribute rateably according to their values at the date of the mortgage and not at a future date. Hence, for the purpose of contribution in this case, the date of the execution of the mortgage and not the date of purchase by the plaintiff determines the value of the property. MARDEN SINGH v. mortgaged to secure a debt. Subsequently, the mortgagor and his sons entered into a partition, whereby each of them took a share of the mortgaged properties and became liable to a share of the mortgage debt. Later on, one of the sons sold the greater portion of his share in the mortgaged properties to the plaintiff, free from incumbrances, and executed an indemnity bond to him authorizing him to proceed against the other properties of the vendor in case the property conveyed be sold by the mortgagee. On its so happening, the amount for which the vendor became liable under the indemnity bond was paid to the plaintiff. Notwithstanding, the plaintiff sued for rateable contribution from the other properties mortgaged. It was contended for the defendants that the plaintiff could not maintain the suit, inasmuch as he had received the amount secured by the indemnity bond. It was also contended that the plaintiff must debit himself with the share of his vendor in the mortgage debt before he could claim contribution from the other properties. Held that the receipt by plaintiff of the amount due under the indemnity bond did not entitle the plaintiff's vendor to sue for contribution. That was not the legal effect of the transaction between the plaintiff and his vendor. Though the plaintiff's vendor had nothing more to convey than an equity of redemption, he purported, nevertheless to convey the lands free from incumbrances. The moneys received by the plaintiff under the indemnity bond represented the difference between the value of the lands, if they had been conveyed free from incumbrance, and their value subject to the incumbrance. The result of the transactions was to convey an equity of redemption alone at an agreed price. The plaintiff's right to rateable contribution was in no way affected by the indemnity bond or the payment to him thereunder. Held also that having regard to the principle upon which the equitable doctrine of contribution is based, an agreement binding only as between the mortgagors is not a 'contract to the contrary' within the meaning of s. 82 of the Transfer of Property Act. The family partition, though binding on the co-owners did not affect their assigns. Plaintiff in consequence was entitled to contribution without any debits. RAMABHADRACHAR v. (705)—S. 82—Tender, requisites of—Mortgagee seeking possession—Redemption.—In a mortgage deed after enumerating several contingencies provision was made on the happening of any of them in the following terms. "Notwithstanding anything contained to the contrary the mortgage debt for the time being owing on the security of these presents shall at once become payable as if the due date or extended date if any had elapsed and in such case all such rights and remedies shall be available to the Banker as will be available to her under the term of these presents upon default being in payment of the principal moneys or interest and all other moneys hereby secured and the Banker may in such event in her discretion without any further consent on the part of the company forthwith enter upon or take possession of the mortgaged premises or any of them of which she is not already in possession." Owing to the happening of some of the contingencies the plaintiff claimed that the debt owing on the security of the mortgage deed had become payable and that she was entitled to enter upon and take possession of the premises mortgaged to her. She contended that the expression "as if the due date had elapsed" not only served to accelerate the due date, but also to fix the amount of the mortgage money at what it would have been if in fact the due date had elapsed. The defendant alleged a tender of the mortgage money to plaintiff's attorneys and refusal to accept the same, and claimed to redeem the property. Held, (1) that the words 'as if due date had elapsed' were used merely to accelerate payment, and they could not be construed to cover the further amount that would have been due on the expiry of the due date of the mortgage. (2) That the tender was not good, as the plaintiff's attorney disclaimed authority to receive it. (3) That the defendant was entitled to redeem the property. A tender must be made either to the principal whose business it is to consider it or to his authorised agent, and a tender made to a person who disclaims authority to receive it is made at the maker's risk. In a suit on a mortgage bond, the contention of the purchasers of the equity of redemption from the mortgagors,—the only defendants, — that the debt should be apportioned under s. 82 of the Transfer of Property Act, between the various mortgaged properties, held, by each of them, was disallowed, it being pointed out that the mortgagee was entitled to realise the whole debt upon the whole property, the right to contribution being only as between the defendants. (717)—Ss. 82, 95—Contribution, suit for, principle of—Mortgage-decree—Payment of mortgage-debt by one of two co mortgagors, to save property from sale—Purchasers of equity of redemption—Assignees of property from permanent lease-holder, right of—Lien over mortgaged properties—Interest on the money paid to save property, if may be higher than that provided for in the mortgage bond—Personal decree—Charge—Equitable lien. The principle upon which contribution is claimed by, and is allowed to, one co-sharer of a property against another, when the former discharges a joint-debt, is a well-known principle, viz., that parties who are equally bound to pay a common debt and who are relieved of the burden of that debt by one of them, should reimburse him of all that he has paid in excess of his proper share of the debt. A puisne incumbrancer, who pays off a prior mortgage, is entitled to be placed in the position of a prior mortgagee, if his intention was not to extinguish the prior lien. (10 C. 1035, R.) The same principle applies in a case where one of two co-mortgagors pays off the entire mortgage-debt and claims to be in the position of the mortgagee, for the purpose of obtaining contribution from his co-mortgagor (4 A. 58, 26 B. 379, 26 A. 407, R.; 14 C. 809, D; 9 C.W.N. 865, Expl. and D.) The same principle does not, however, apply to persons, who are not co-mortgagors, but are the assignees of a mokarari interest granted by the mortgagor himself, and they are not entitled to claim the same lien, as against the shares of the co-mortgagors as the co-mortgagors. They are entitled only to a personal decree. Co-mortgagors who have purchased the equity of redemption of the shares in the property of some of the mortgagors and have saved the property from sale, by paying the balance of the entire mortgage-debt, are not bound by the covenant as to the rate of interest as provided in the mortgage-bond. The liability of the defendants to pay the contribution-money to the plaintiffs, arises upon very different considerations from those which existed at the time of the execution of the mortgage-bond, and it is not right and proper to refuse to the plaintiffs the ordinary rate of interest at 12 per cent. per annum, which, in a case like this, the Court allows. S. 82 of the Transfer of Property Act is a statutory enactment in India of a principle which has long been recognised to be founded on justice and equity. Per Richards, C.J.—"It seems to me that the s. 82 creates what I may call a statutory charge on the other properties. It creates no personal liability against the owner of the property. In some cases it might be most inequitable to make the owner personally liable. The liability might be greater than the interest in the property. In my opinion, art. 99 of the Limitation Act has no application whatever t› a suit to enforce the right conferred by s. 82. It makes no difference whatever that the party claiming the charge did not redeem the mortgage or discharge the mortgage-decree before the property was actually sold, nor does it make any difference that the amount of the mortgage or mortgage-decree was not entirely realised out of the plaintiff's property. In considering whether or not the plaintiff has a charge, we need not and ought not to go outside the provisions of ss. 82 and 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. Ss. 82 and 95 are quite independent of each other." Per Banerji J.—The liability to contribute is that of the estates subject to the mortgage, and where those estates have passed to a purchaser or to the heirs of the mortgagor, it is not a personal liability. The necessary effect of the provisions of s 82, therefore, is that, where one of the mortgaged estates has contributed more than its own quota of liability, the owner of that estate is entitled to recover the excess from the other estates subject to the mortgage, and acquires a charge on those estates. This charge is created by the provisions of s. 82 read with s. 100. Per Banerji, and Chamier, JJ. (Richards, C.J., dubitante) :—"Where two properties are mortgaged to secure one debt and both properties are sold in execution of a mortgage-decree the owner of the property which has borne more than its rateable share has a right to a personal decree against the owner of the property that has borne less than its rateable share of the debt, where the latter has actually received the surplus proceeds of the sale of his property." Per Richards, C.J. —" The plaintiff's right originally was not a personal right for contribution. He had a charge on the property which had borne less than its rateable share of the mortgage debt. He could enforce this right so long as the property of the defendants 3 to 5 remained unsold ; and any right that he had against that property would attach to surplus proceeds of sale after the property had been sold. The property, however, having been sold and the surplus proceeds paid out, the plaintiff's right, if any, has now completely changed. He has no right now unless it can be said that the payment out of the surplus proceeds gave him a new cause of action. The surplus proceeds of the sale belonged to the defendants 3 to 5 subject to the plaintiff's charge. No fiduciary relation existed between the plaintiff and the defendants 3 to 5, although it may be that, after the plaintiff had filed an objection to the payment out of the money, the Court was wrong in allowing payment to be made without providing for the plaintiff's charge. It seems to me that his claim can hardly be regarded as a claim for money had and received by the defendants 3 to 5 to the use of the plaintiff." Per Banerji, J.—In spite of the charge in the plaintiff's favour, the property belonging to the defendants 3 to 5 was liable to be sold in execution of the decree obtained on the mortgage and was accordingly sold. Had the whole amount of the sale-proceeds been appropriated to the discharge of the mortgage, the charge would have been of no effect. But as there was a surplus, the charge attached to the surplus. Had a part only of the property been sold for the satisfaction of the mortgage, the plaintiff would have been entitled to enforce his charge on the remainder of the property, but as the whole property was sold and the rest of it acquired free from the charge, the plaintiff could not follow it into the hands of the purchaser. His lien would attach to the surplus sale-proceeds into which the property was converted. Those proceeds are substituted for the property itself and are therefore subject to the lien to which the property itself was subject. The principle is recognized in s. 73 of the Transfer of Property Act. It arises out of equitable considerations and the lien acquired is an equitable and not a possessory lien. The fact, therefore, of the withdrawal from Court of the money to which it attached cannot extinguish or affect it. Under the category of suits referred to in art. 62 are included actions for money wrongfully received by the defendant to which the plaintiff was in justice and equity entitled. Where, therefore, surplus sale-proceeds were withdrawn from the Court by the defendants, in spite of the protests of the plaintiff who had a charge upon them, held that the suit for recovery of the money was an action for money had and received within the meaning of art. 62, Limitation Act, and the time began to run from the date when the money was withdrawn. Per Banerji, J.—If the claim be regarded as one to enforce an equitable right, it is Governed by the six years' rule of limitation provided in art. 120, and is within time, whether the cause of action arose on the date the property was sold or when the money was withdrawn. He does not, therefore, acquire a charge over his co-mortgagor's portions of the mortgaged property to the extent of that execess. There is no analogy between such cases and cases of co-sureties. Co-sureties bind themselves to discharge in certain eventualities the liabilities of third parties, for which they otherwise would not be responsible, while co-mortgagors (including in that name their transferees) are themselves the debtors liable jointly to their mortgagee for repayment for money they have borrowed from him on the security of their immoveable property, a liability which is enforceable by sale of that property (12 A. 110, 4 A 58, Ex parte Giffard, (1802) 6 Ves. 805 = 6 R.R. 53, Davies v. Humphreys, (1840) 6 M. and W. 153 = 55 R.R. 547, 14 C. 809, 26 M. 686, 21 C. 142, 20 M. 23, 14 A. 273, Platt v. Mendel, (1884) L.R. 27 Ch. The test in such cases is whether the payment made by the claimant of the amount realized by the sale of his property exceeds the amount for which that property was rateably liable, and whether the property, from the owners of which contribution is claimed, has to that extent been relieved of liability and has thus benefited. On objections being raised by the mortgagee as to the insufficiency of the amount, the mortgagor agreed to pay the balance which was found due to him. At the request of the pleader for the mortgagors, the Court paid the money deposited to the mortgagees and endorsed payment on its back and returned the deed to the mortgagees. Held that the mortgagees did not take the money in full discharge of the mortgage as provided by s. 83, Transfer of Property Act. Where a mortgagor deposited the mortgage amount into Court under s. 83 of the T. P. (748)—S. 95—Reason for enactment.—Before the passing of the T. P. Act, decrees for sale were made of all sorts of interests in properties mortgaged. Properties were sold subject to one, two, three, four, and six mortgages. Persons interested were not made parties to the suits, and endless litigation was the result. One reason for the passing of the T.P. Act was to strike at the shameful abuses which had arisen by reason of the procedure allowed by some of the Courts in the enforcement of mortgages, procedure which often only benefited the legal profession—no doubt a very deserving body of men and ended in the ruin of the unfortunate mortgagor, if not of one or more of the mortgagees. In order to strike at the system, s. 85 of the Act was introduced to bring all persons interested before the Court in one suit, so that their rights may be dealt with and disposed of. SRI GOPAL v. (749)—S. 85—Applicability to mortgages executed before the Act.—S. 85 of the Act only applies a principle which was long before recognised by the Courts of this country, and is a principle to which in justice, equity and good conscience, those Courts were bound to give effect. (750)—S. 85—Party interested—Plaintiff, no notice—Decree, effect of, on interested party, not joined—Transfer of Property Act, not a complete Code—Substantial justice.—S. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act imports an obligation upon the mortgagee-plaintiff to bring on the record interested persons, of whose existence he has notice. The section does not lay down what consequences are to flow from the breach of this statutory obligation. If a person interested in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption, has not been joined as a party to the mortgage-suit, the decree and sale in execution do not destroy his right of redemption, and he is entitled to exercise it in any proceeding properly framed for the purpose, or set it up in defence whenever his title is sought to be ignored or assailed. The Transfer of Property Act does not purport to be a complete Code, and a recourse to the first principles of jurisprudence may occasionally be useful in the administration of law as contained in an Indian Code, however carefully it may have been drawn up. One of these fundamental principles which regulate the administration of justice is that no one is to be condemned, punished or to be deprived of his property in any judicial proceeding unless he had an opportunity of being heard. The law has not always been developed on logical lines. What has to be steadily kept in view is not logical precision, but substantial justice in the determination of controversies. A mortgagor executed several mortgages on distinct shares of the

The term 'property' used in s. 85 of the Transfer of Proporty Act in the phrase "property comprised in the mortgage," indicates not the actual physical object but denotes merely the rights in such object which form the subject matter of the transaction. In a suit brought on the mortgage against the managers, a decree for sale of the mortgaged property was passed, and at the Court sale the property was sold. The defendant No. 2, who was an adult co-parcener, was not a party either to the mortgage-deed or to the suit and execution proceedings. But s. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, which is repealed, by O. XXXIV, r. 1, required that a person having an interest in the mortgage security only should be made a party to such a suit. A creditor of the mortgage, who attaches the mortgaged property in execution of a money decree, does not obtain by his attachment any charge or lien upon the attached property, he only has the right to redeem. It was found that the land was re-mortgaged by the widow. The widow was not added as a party to the suit. Held, that the suit by the daughter, without joining the widow as a party to it, for the redemption of the property mortgaged by her deceased father, was not maintainable. Under Buddhist Law, a widow is entitled to an absolute interest in her own share of the family property and to a life interest in the remainder. Pro. Code. Neither the newly added defendants nor any other defendant proved that any sum remained due on foot of the prior incumbrance. So, the Court of first instance passed a decree for sale of the mortgaged property in favour of the plaintiffs on non-payment to the amount found to be due to them on foot of their mortgage. On appeal, the District Judge, without entering into the merits of the case, came to the conclusion that the suit of the plaintiffs must fail, owing to the fact that they did not, in their plaint, implead the prior mortgagees. Held, that the Court by exercising the power conferred upon it by s. 32, Civ. Pro. Code, and directing that the prior mortgagees should be brought on the record as defendants, has satisfied any obligation which lay upon the plaintiffs in respect of a prior mortgage and cured the defect, if any, on the ground of non-joinder of parties in the first instance: whether or not anything was due on foot of their prior mortgage was a matter peculiarly within the knowledge of the mortgagees and a matter of which the plaintiffs would ordinarily be in ignorance. (5 M. 385, R.) The mortgagee's right to be paid the whole of his debt, from whatever portion of the mortgaged properties he wishes to compromise in his suit, cannot be questioned. In the event of the purchasers being obliged to pay the whole debt and being able to show that the unsold share is also liable, they would be entitled to contribution from the unsold share, notwithstanding its non-inclusion in the mortgagee's suit, (2 A. 807, 20 B. 615, F.) The rule, that all persons interested in the actual subject of the suit should be before the Court, in order that, as between them, complete justice might, as far as possible be done, cannot be taken as authorising a Court to complicate a suit by a mortgagee, by introducing into it controversy, in which the mortgagee, is really not interested. If the action of a mortgagee has had the effect of extinguishing the mortgage lien, upon any portion of the mortgaged property, so as to relieve it from the liability to bear its proportion of the debt, he cannot recover more than what the property he proceeds against would be rateably liable for. And where a mortgagor conveys not merely the equity of redemption in a portion of the mortgaged property, but the property itself, free from any liability to contribute to the mortgage debt, the purchaser may insist upon the mortgagee proceeding, in the first instance, against the mortgaged property which is unsold in the hands of the mortgagor. But where the purchasers have not purchased it free from the mortgage and where the share not proceeded against is not in the hands of the mortgagor, and is the property of a third party, who is sought to be affected by a transaction entered into by another, purporting to act

Nor does it apply so as to compel a mortgagee to proceed against a security which may be insufficient, or doubtful, or may involve him in litigation to realise. In the suit, the second mortgagee also was made a party defendant. The Subordinate Judge directed that, on default in the payment of the amounts due to the first and second mortgagees, the mortgaged properties should be sold and the sale-proceeds distributed in the manner provided in the Transfer of Property Act. The contractual rate of interest was allowed to the mortgagees up to the date fixed for payment and thereafter the interest was to be 3 p.c. per annum. There was no provision in the decree allowing the second mortgagee to redeem the first mortgage by paying off the debt due to him. Held, the object of making a second mortgagee a party defendant is that the property may be sold free of his encumbrance, not to enable him to practically obtain a decree against the principle defendant without bringing a suit properly framed for that purpose. The provisions of Ch. The language of the section is very stringent, saying that all such persons must be joined as parties. The Transfer of Property Act has not been brought into force as yet in this province but the spirit of the rules which it contains is the natural guide of Courts bound under s. 4 (2) of the Civil Courts Regulation to act according to justice, equity and good conscience. Besides this, the Courts in Upper Burmah are under a special obligation in the matter, for by Circular No. 24 (Civil) of 1892 this High Court has, with the previous approval of the Local Government, directed that they "shall be guided, so far as may be, by the provisions of ss. 83 to 97, both inclusive, of the Transfer of Property Act, in dealing with suits relating to mortgages." It was therefore the plain duty of the Courts below to insist on the joinder of all the proper parties. The necessity of a strict adherence to the rules on this subject is abundantly apparent from the confusion that has taken place in the present proceedings. MAUNG KO v. Further where the plaintiff has claimed for relief only subject to such admitted rights, the decree cannot possibly be construed and if the Court had granted him larger relief than he himself asked for. The decree might have clearly provided that the mortgaged property should be sold subject to the prior mortgage and the proper course to be observed in drawing up a decree is that pointed out in Lachmi Narain v. Jwala Nath (18 A. 344, R.,) still, in construing a decree, admission in the pleadings or in the course of the case should not be ignored and the decree taken as negativing any right which was conceded by all parties, and in respect of which there was no necessity for the Court to make reference in terms in the decree, provided such a construction does not infringe any statutory provision. The defendant judgment-debtor did not deposit the money till the 14th of April 1883. The Court executing the decree held that as the money had been deposited beyond time, the mortgage should be foreclosed and made an order accordingly. On appeal, the lower appellate Court held that the payment of the money on the 14th instead of on the 13th April might be treated as an application for extension of time and set aside the order of the Court of first instance. On appeal to the High Court, it was held, that the terms of a decree cannot be modified by the Court executing the decree, and in the present case, even if it were to exclude the 13th October 1882, the deposit made by the defendant judgment-debtor was beyond time, six months being clearly named in the decree. The decree of the lower Court was accordingly reversed. WALI MUHAMMED v. HUSAIN BAKHSH, A.W.N. 1884, 178.

(1 C.L.J. 381, 32 I.A. 102, 27 A. 334, 15 M.L.J. 258, 9 C.W.N. 601, 2 A.L.J. 397, 7 Bom. L.R. 433, 23 C. 437, 24 B. 345, 18 A. 482, R.) Art. 178 of the Limitation Act of 1877 did not apply to applications beyond the scope of Civ. Pro. Code, but it does not follow that that article, or the corresponding article of the Limitation Act of 1908, applies to all applications made in the course of a suit. Art. 181 of the Limitation Act of 1908 does not govern an application for order absolute under O. XXXIV, r. 3 of the Code of 1908. A decree nisi in a mortgage suit was made on March 30, 1904, for foreclosure, and there was also a decree made for costs against the mortgagee in favour of the daughters of the mortgagor who were made parties to the suit. An appeal from the decree was withdrawn on March 5, 1907. On September 9, 1908, an application was made for order absolute for foreclosure by M, the decree-holder. On September 19, 1908, A objected that the decree nisi had been purchased by her at execution sale for costs of the daughters of the mortgagor on August 11, 1908, which was confirmed on November 4, 1908, and she alone was competent to execute the decree nisi. M. then applied on December 23, 1908, for reversal of the sale. A, in the meanwhile, applied for execution of the decree, and the Court on December 19, 1908, dismissed the application of M for decree absolute. On July 7, 1909, the sale was set aside, and the application of A for order absolute was dismissed. On the next day, that is, on July 8, 1909, M applied for order absolute, but no order was passed on that application. A appealed from the order setting aside the sale, and the appeal was dismissed on February 2, 1910. On February 10, M again applied that her application of July 8 might be taken into consideration and order absolute may be made. The judgment debtor objected that it was barred by limitation: Held, that the applications of July 8, 1909, and February 10, 1910, should be treated in substance as applications for rivival or continuation of the original application for order absolute made on September 9, 1908, and that, even if either of these two applications be treated as an independent application, it is not barred by limitation, as art. 181 of the Limitation Act of 1908 does not govern applications in pending suits by which the Court is invited to make the final decree. Second suit by mortgagor for redemption barred. —In a suit instituted by a mortgagee, a decree was passed to the effect that, if the amount due under the mortgage on a date fixed, be not paid on that date, the mortgage would be foreclosed and the defendant mortgagor would be absolutely debarred of all right to redeem. Before the date so fixed, the mortgagor applied for an extension of the time for payment of the mortgage-amount and got the extension on condition that the mortgagee should immediately obtain possession of the mortgaged premises and be in possession until payment was made by the mortgagor and should surrender possession at the time of such payment. The term fixed expired; the mortgagor did not pay the amount; and the mortgagee held possession for more than twelve years. The mortgagor now sued for redemption on payment of the mortgage amount. Held, that, apart from the question whether the mortgagor can bring a suit for redemption when he failed to pay the mortgage-amount ordered to be paid under the decree in the first suit, the suit was barred by limitation, more than twelve years having expired since the date fixed in the decree in the first suit, as also more than twelve years from the date as per the extension granted, and the defendant having, by adverse possession for more than twelve years, acquired an indefeasible title to the property; the possession of the defendant, after the lapse of the term fixed for payment, was not as mortgagee but as absolute owner. On the 22nd October 1889, C executed a second mortgage by conditional sale in favour of A and B: this mortgage comprised Patara and eight other villages not including Bhatpura. On the 1st October 1891, A sold his moiety of this mortgage to G. On the 17th September 1893, B and K commenced a suit against C and G for foreclosure of the first mortgage. On the 27th September 1893, B and G commenced a suit in the same Court against C for foreclosure of the second mortgage. On the 22nd December 1894 decrees were made in both these suits. By the decree in the first suit it was ordered that on the defendant paying to the plaintiff or into Court on the 22nd April 1895, a stated sum, the plaintiff should deliver up to the defendant all documents in his possession relating to the

The decree in the second suit was in the same form mutatis mutandis. The time for redemption on the decree was from time to time enlarged but the money was not paid by the mortgagor. Finally, on the 3rd January 1896, when the enlarged time was about to expire, G paid into Court a sum of money, and that sum was taken out by the plaintiffs, the first mortgagees, in discharge of their mortgages. On the 3rd August 1897, G made an application to the Court that a decree for absolute foreclosure of the mortgaged property might be prepared in his favour. This application was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on the grounds that as G paid up the amount due under the decree and complied with the order embodied in the decree, the decree no longer remained capable of execution, and that as G had become the representative of the prior mortgagee under s. 74 of the Transfer of Property Act, he was entitled to bring a suit for foreclosure. On the 3rd February 1898, G commenced a foreclosure suit against B, K and C. B objected to the suit on the ground that it was barred by s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code. The High Court held that the suit was so barred. Held, (1) that s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code was no bar to the suit since on payment by G of the sum into Court before the expiry of the enlarged time and acceptance of that sum by the plaintiffs the decree was spent and became discharged and satisfied, and there was, therefore, nothing left to be done in the execution department. G, having made that payment, acquired under s. 74 of the Transfer of Property Act, all the rights and powers of the mortgagees as such, but this would not have the effect of reviving or giving validity to a decree; which by the terms of it had become discharged (2) that the decree passed in the first suit was not adapted to a suit by a first mortgagee against subsequent incumbrancers and mortgagor. It appeared to be a transcript of the form of order given in s. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act; that form contemplates a suit between one mortgagee and the mortgagor only and should be treated as a common form and not to be literally followed in every suit for foreclosure, but to be adapted to the particular circumstances of each case. The decree in question did not provide for the exercise by the puisne incumbrancers of their successive rights of redemption or for working out the rights of the parties in the event of any puisne incumbrancer in front of the mortgagor redeeming the mortgaged property so as to make a complete decree. Subsequently, in 1896, after the death of B, his sons mortgaged with possession the entire share to one K, now represented by the appellant. The respondent instituted a suit for foreclosure on his mortgage of 1892 and impleaded K, and the sons of B, as defendants to his suit, and obtained a decree for foreclosure. In applying for an order absolute, however, he did not make K, a party to the proceedings and obtained the order only against the sons of B. Subsequently, on the objection of K, it was decided that the order obtained against the sons of B, did not bind him and that he should be allowed to deposit the decretal amount and thereby to redeem the property. K deposited the money which the respondent withdrew and thus his mortgage was satisfied. The respondent now, on the basis of the order absolute against the sons of B alone, sought to redeem K's mortgage of 1896. The question for decision was, whether the order absolute obtained by the respondent could still be considered as subsisting, although his decretal amount had been deposited in full and his mortgage-decree satisfied; Held, that the decree for foreclosure obtained by the respondent was a joint and indivisible decree against all the defendants, and there could be only one order absolute affecting all the defendants. The effects of the deposit of money by K, who was not a party to the order absolute was that the respondent's mortgage has been satisfied in its entirety, and he could not, therefore, urge that the equity of redemption, which was acquired by him as a complement to the mortgagee-rights under an incomplete foreclosure proceeding, still vested in him. The effect of the payment of the decretal money by K was, that the respondent's rights as mortgagee passed to the redeeming puisne mortgagee, whatever they were at the date of such payment. Therefore, a mortgage suit must be held to be pending, at any rate, until the decree conditional, referred to in s. 86, has been made absolute, or until the payment made by that decree has been validly made, as the

(848)—Ss. 86 to 88, scope of—Decree for foreclosure—Order absolute, effect of.—Per Stanley, C. J.—The decree passed under s. 86 is not a money-decree, nor is the order absolute passed under s. 87 such a decree. The order absolute for foreclosure, so far from directing the payment of the mortgage-debt, has the effect of discharging the debt. If, in a foreclosure-suit, the mortgagor thinks fit to pay the mortgage-debt, and thus save his interest in the property, he does so by reason of the obligation, which he undertook when he executed the mortgage security, and with a view to preserve the property, and not in obedience to any order of the Court. Any payment made by him will not be in execution of the decree. The decree nisi puts him under no obligation to pay the debt, but simply declares what the consequences of non-payment will be. Similar observations apply to the order contemplated by s. 88 of the Act. The mortgage security does not lose its character, until an order absolute for foreclosure is passed. It remains a debt secured upon the property. It is only when the order absolute for foreclosure has been passed, that the debt is discharged and, in lieu of it, the mortgagee acquires the absolute ownership of the property. SHAM SUNDER v. (863)—Ss. 86, 88 and 94—Direction in the decree for payment of interest beyond the day fixed down to the day of actual payment.—Ss. 86 and 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, contain no direction for interest beyond the day to be fixed by the Court up to which the account is directed to be taken. It is, however, competent to the Court to allow interest after the fixed day; such interest should however be calculated at the Court rate and not at the mortgage-rate. The scheme and intention of the Transfer of Property Act is that a general account should be taken once for all, and an aggregate amount be stated in the decree for principal, interest, and costs, due on a fixed day; and that after the expiration of that day, if the property should not be redeemed, the matter should pass from the domain of contract to that of judgment, and the rights of the mortgagee should thenceforth depend, not on the contents of his bond, but on the directions in the decree. The directions for payment to the parties contained in s. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, cannot be read literally because s. 94 contemplates a final adjustment and provides for payment of subsequent costs, and there is nothing in the Act which precludes the subsequent interest also being taken into account. (868)—S. 87—Foreclosure—Decree for payment of costs as well—Passing of order absolute for foreclosure—Right of mortgagee to execute costs.—The expression "the debt secured by the mortgagee" in s. 87 of the Act is wide enough to include the costs of the foreclosure suit if the decree in that suit makes the right to redeem depend on the payment of the costs. So where a decree declares that the mortgagee can foreclose if the amount due on the mortgage together with the costs is not paid then the costs must be deemed to have been secured by the mortgage. Though they may not have been in so many words secured by the instrument of mortgage still in effect they are secured by the instrument in consequence of the provisions of the law regulating the enforcement of the security. Consequently when an order absolute for foreclosure is made the costs also are discharged and no further execution can issue for them, notwithstanding the terms of the decree. KHUSHAL SINGH v. (872)—S. 87—Final order for foreclosure or redemption—S. 2, Civ. Pro. Code—Decree—Right to redeem after due date fixed in decree for foreclosure or redemption—Equitable relief.—Every application, which initiates a proceeding under s. 87 of the Transfer of Property Act, is a "plaint," and the proceeding itself is a "suit," though not the original mortgage suit within the meaning of those words in the definition of the term "decree" given in s. 2 of the Civ. Pro. Code. Therefore an order making foreclosure absolute, as well as an order that a redemption has taken place, is a decree and is, therefore, appealable. (3 N.L.R. 55, 18 C. 500, Appr.; 27 C. 705, Diss.; 2 N.L.R. 137, F.) The mortgagor is entitled to redeem the mortgaged property, as of right, before the date fixed for redemption in the decree for foreclosure or redemption. But, if default is made in the payment of the amount, the decree holder is entitled to apply at any time after the dies redemptionis for an order absolute, and the Court is bound to pass such an order, unless, on sufficient cause, it extends the period of redemption. The mortgagee's right to foreclose after the due date is subject to an equitable relief allowed to the mortgagor on proper grounds. to that time. The 7th October was fixed for the disposal of the application and the Court directed that notice should be served on all the judgment-debtors. In the case of the respondent the notice was served by affixing it to the door of his house. On the 7th October the Court passed an order absolute for foreclosure. The respondent made an application which purported to be one under s. 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have that order set aside on the ground that the notice had not been served upon him. The Court rejected the application. Held, that s. 108, Civ. Pro. The order of the Court making the decree for foreclosure was a proper order, and, one which it was bound to pass. MUSAMMAT JAFRI BEGAM v. LAKSHMI DHAR, 4 O.C. 238. [R., 4 O.C. 301.]

(874)—S. 87—Postponement of date of payment—Application by outsider—Stay of proceedings — Court's power — Foreclosure decree—Preliminary decree to be made absolute, Court's discretion to refuse.—S. 87 of the Transfer of Property Act does not allow the Court to postpone the date of payment on the application of an outsider. The provision regarding the power of the Court to postpone the date of payment relates to matters as between the mortgagor and mortgagee. S.87, Transfer of Property Act, does not give inherent jurisdiction to a Court to stay proceedings. Where, in a suit for foreclosure, the Court was asked, after the expiry of the period allowed for the payment of money, to make the preliminary decree absolute under s. 87, Transfer of Property Act, the Court has no jurisdiction to decline to make the decree absolute on the application of a third party who seeks in a separate suit to establish his right to redeem the property mortgaged. So, where an application under s. 87 is made within one year of the date of decree, no notice is necessary to the judgment-debtor under s. 248, Civ. Pro. Code. The decision in 22 M. 133 proceeds upon the view that the defendant could apply for an extension of the time for redemption, only if and when the plaintiff applies for an order absolute under the second paragraph of s. 87, a view which has been dissented from by the Full Bench in 25 M. 300. partition did not operate as notice to the mortgagee of the son's right in the property. Registration is notice to all subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers of the same property. The doctrine, however, cannot be extended to others besides subsequent purchasers or incumbrancers. A person acquiring a title to or interest in immoveable property should, before acquiring, investigate the title and inquire whether it is in anyway burdened, or else he acquires the title or interest subject to the existing burdens on the property. That makes it incumbent upon him to search in the registry. No duty, however, is laid by law on a person, who has acquired a title or interest in property, to search for subsequent titles or interests. TATYARAO VENKTRAO VASE v. PUTTAPPA KOTRAPPA, 12 Bom. Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) —continued.

—Act not a complete Code.—An application for an order absolute under s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act is not an application for execution of a decree, and the order absolute is itself not an order in execution proceedings, and is, in its essence, the final decree for sale and is consequently appealable as such (25 C. 133, 1 C.W.N. ccix, 29 C. 651, R. & F.; 12 A.61, F.B., 13 A. 278, Diss.) Where a compromise-decree directs the sale of the mortgaged properties in execution, in the event of the failure of the mortgagors to pay two consecutive instalments, and this contingency has happened, and where the compromise-decree has never been varied, but the mortgagees merely seek to enforce it strictly according to its terms, they are entitled to execute the decree without recourse to another suit. (19 A. 186, D.) S. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act authorizes the Court to make on order absolute only in cases under s. 88, and in the event of non-payment of the sum determined under that section as due to the mortgagees. The characteristic of a decree under s. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act is that the entire sum due is made payable on a day specified; and a decree for payment by instalments is not contemplated by the Act; unless the entire amount specified as payable is brought into Court for payment to the mortgagee, the latter is entitled to an order absolute, as the mortgagee is not bound to accept any sum in part satisfaction of his decree. A consent decree which lacks these essential characteristics is not a decree in accordance with s. 88 of the Act, and as such a decree is not contemplated by s. 88, the provisions of s. 89 are not applicable thereto. (3 C.L.J. 188, 7 C.W.N. 172, 3 C. 469, R.) There is nothing to prevent the parties to a litigation from waiving an advantage of a particular law or rule, if that law or rule is not based on a ground of public policy and is intended solely for the benefit and protection of an individual in his private capacity. (6 C.L.J. 320, R.) A consent decree directing payment by instalments is perfectly valid in law, though it is not covered by s. 88 and though the provisions of s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act are consequently inapplicable to it. (11 C.W.N. 879, R.; 21 C. 818, Expl.) The Court has, where the circumstances require it, an inherent power to do that justice for the administration, of which it alone exists; and where the Legislature has provided no procedure to be followed in cases which must and do arise, the Court must be taken to have inherent power to decide the question of procedure and, if necessary, to invent a procedure for themselves. (3 C.L.J. 29, 67, 10 C.W.N. 719, 5 C.L.J. 611, 15 A. 59, R and F.) The Transfer of Property Act, in so far as at any rate it relates to the procedure in mortgage suits, is not a complete Code. It makes no provision for decrees by consent and is necessarily silent upon the question of the procedure to be followed for orders absolute when such a decree has been made. This, however, does not show that the Legislature intended by implication to exclude decrees by consent in the case of mortgage suits. In a case of this description, where the mortgagee decree-holder applies for an order absolute upon notice to the judgment-debtor, the Court ought to entertain the application and make the necessary order. The object of an order absolute is to afford to the mortgagor an opportunity to show that the preliminary decree has been satisfied. An application for an order absolute is entirely for the benefit of the mortgagor, upon the principle that, when a conditional decree has been made, the decree-holder ought not to be ordinarily allowed, without previous notice to the judgment-debtor, to take out execution, on the allegation that the condition or contingency has been fulfilled. (10 C.W.N. 306, 9 C.L.J. 271, 32 C. 253, R). A Court in the administration of justice will not refuse an application, which on the merits it ought to grant, and in law can grant, simply because the applicant asks the Court to exercise its admitted powers under a wrong section. Judicial procedure has been framed for the furtherance of justice and not to defeat it, and the Court cannot refuse to act in aid of justice on merely technical grounds. (34 C. 1037, F.B., R. and F.) The Court, in dealing with the application for an order absolute, must be guided by consideration as to whether any delay on the part of the mortgagee has not been unreasonable, so as to bring it within the rules applied in such cases by Courts of Equity. It could be quite open to the Court, in a case where an application for order absolute is made with a view to defeat the operation of the law of limitation, to consider whether the applicant should be assisted to attain his purpose. To such applications s. 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure is applicable, and bars the recognition of payments made out of Court in pursuance of the decree unless such payments are certified to the Court in the manner prescribed by the section. Therefore, as he took his assignment pendente lite, the doctrine of lis pendens applied to his case. So, where he was made party-respondent, as he could properly have been under s. 372 of the Civ. Pro. The application was granted, though no application had been made for an order absolute and none was passed. More than three years after this application, the decree-holder applied for an order absolute. Held that the order passed on the prior application must be considered to be an order absolute for sale as well as an order directing certain further steps in execution, and such being the case it was not open to the decree-holder now to apply for an order under s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act. More than three years from the date of that application, plaintiff made an application for execution, to which, however, the defendant (judgment-debtor) pleaded limitation, on the ground that this application was made more than three years after the application for order absolute, which was an application for execution. Held, that the Court, having passed the order absolute, was bound, also, to order that the mortgaged property be sold and the proceeds dealt with as mentioned in s. 88. The Court having omitted to pass any such order, the earlier application should be considered to be still pending and the later application should be treated as a part or continuation of the earlier and that there was, therefore, no bar by limitation. It is wrong to hold that, until the passing of an order absolute for sale, the decree in a mortgage-suit is incapable of execution, and that time would not begin to run till the date of the order absolute for sale. 25 M. 244 is to the effect that a decree under s. 88 is capable of execution and that an application under s. 89 is only an application for the execution of that decree. Transfer of Property Act has been passed, the mortgagor's right to redeem does not become extinct; and it is only when the right of redemption of the mortgagor is gone, that the mortgagee can cause the mortgaged property to be sold by applying for execution of the decree obtained by him under s. 88 of the Act. Since his right to make an application for execution depends on the passing of the order absolute, his application would be one within time if presented within three years from the date of such order under s. 89. The prayer for an order under that section and the prayer for the sale of the property may be made in one and the same application of the decree-holder, who is not bound to make a separate application for an order under s. 89, though that would be a preferable course to pursue. Till then the mortgagee remained in possession, but had not, when he was ousted, applied for an order for sale under s. 89, Transfer of Property Act.

He refused to receive the money and contended that the Court had no power, in execution proceedings, to permit the mortgagors to pay it into Court and to direct delivery of possession to them, they not having paid on the fixed date. Held that a decree for sale, under s. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, is a final decree, and all subsequent proceedings are proceedings in execution of that decree, and to them the provisions of the Civ. Pro. Code are, so far as they may be applicable, to be applied. (25 M. 244, R.) Unless, then, there is something in the decree to debar him from so doing, the judgment-debtor is entitled to stop execution by payment of the debt, at any time after the decree has been passed, and before the execution sale is complete and it is not finally complete until he has had his opportunity of obtaining its rescission under s. 310-A of the Code. The decree for sale does not debar the mortgagor of any right in default of payment ; the only penalty affixed to the default is the liability to have the property sold. (31 C. 863, R.) Though the mortgagors be regarded as decree-holders, within the meaning of s. 2, Civ. Pro. Code, (19 M. 40, D.; 24 M. 244, 25 M. 300, R.) by their default, they only lose the privileges of a decree-holder, which their creditor has thrust upon them, but they do not thereby lose their rights as judgment-debtors to pay the debt into the Execution Court and require satisfaction to be entered up. A mortgagor can obtain possession of his property in execution-proceedings after paying money into the Court executing the decree. Regarding the rate of interest to be awarded to the mortgagee after the decree directing the sale, he was held entitled only to the usual Court rate of interest, i.e. 6 per cent. and not to the melwaram of the property according to the terms of the mortgage. But where the nett proceeds of the sale are insufficient to pay the amount due for the time being upon the mortgage, the mortgagee may, if the balance is legally recoverable otherwise than out of the property sold, obtain from the Court, under s. 90 of the Act, a decree for the balance to be recovered in the ordinary way in which a money-decree would be recoverable against the person and other property of the judgment-debtor. Upon an application for such decree, notice would issue to the judgment-debtor, who would have an opportunity of showing cause why such a decree should not be passed. Whether the balance is legally recoverable or not is a question which must depend upon evidence, and the Court ought to go into it, even though the judgment-creditor had not asserted and proved the right in question in the suit, and even though the decree passed under s. 88 provided for no such relief. (966)—Ss. 88, 97 and 98—Mortgage-decree, interest on—Document, ambiguous, construction of.—A Court has power, under a decree in a mortgage suit, to allow interest subsequent to the date of decree and the date fixed by the decree for payment, until realization. The object of fixing a day for payment by the mortgagor is for the purpose of assigning a definite time at which the mortgagor's right of redemption is to cease, and the mortgagee's right to foreclose or sell is to attach, and not for the purpose of staying the payment of interest. The language of s. 88, Transfer of Property Act, is calculated to cause difficulty for it ignores the difference between a foreclosure and a sale. In the case of a foreclosure interest stops because the mortgagee gets the property in lieu of his debt, whereas a sale must be subject to some substantial delay, and in many cases is subject to long delays. But considering the universality of the long established practice, its continuance for years after the Transfer of Property Act was passed, the manifest justice of it, the lack of any apparent reason for upsetting it, the conformity with it of s. 97 which is pari materia with s. 98, the presumption that s. 88 was framed with reference not to the running of interest but to the determination of the time for redemption or sale alternatively, and the form of suit sanctioned by the Civil Procedure Code, the proper construction to be placed on s. 88 should be in accordance with the decisions given in Achalabala v. Purendra Nath Dey (I L.R. 24 Cal. 766), Supparayar v. Ponusami (I.L.R. 21 Mad. 364) and Bakar Sajjad v. Udit Narain Singh (I.L.R. 21 All. 361). While these proceedings were pending and before the sale was held, the Court was asked to sell the property for the realization of the amounts of both the decrees. The property was then sold and purchased by the appellant who was not a party to either of the decrees. (974)—S. 89—Discharge of an anterior encumbrance after Court-sale of property—Right of person discharging—Order absolute for sale, effect of.—In the absence of clear proof to the contrary, it is to be taken that, when the money of a person interested in immoveable property, as for example, the owner of the equity of redemption of a puisne mortgagee, goes to discharge an anterior encumbrance affecting it, the presumption is that the anterior encumbrance enures to the advantage of the party making the payment, if it is for his benefit so to treat it. So, where, after sale of properties in execution of a decree, a person advances money to the judgment-debtor to enable him to set aside the sale under s. 310-A, the said presumption arises and may be inferred as well from the terms of the instrument under which the loan has been made, viz., the recitals therein as to the decree, the execution thereunder and the loan being for the discharge of the debt. (10 C. 1035, R. & F.) On a contention raised, in this case, that, on the passing of the order absolute for sale the mortgagee's security became extinguished by virtue of the provision to that effect at the end of s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, and the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor came, thereafter, to be precisely in the position of parties to a simple money-decree and, that, therefore, the payment in question to the judgment-debtor could not operate to confer any right of him on the lender, held, the construction of the provisions of s. 89, (25 M. 244, R.) as contended for would upset completely one of the main principles underlying the law of mortgages, viz., that the effect of a sale in execution of a mortgage-decree is to vest in the purchaser, at such sale, the property as it stood at the date of mortgage and, therefore, free from that and all subsequent encumbrances. (29 I.A. 9, R. & F.) The right of the purchaser and the mortgagees can, therefore, be protected only by postulating the continuance of the lien down to the time of the sale, and the transfer of it thereafter to the sale proceeds. greater portion of his claim by the sale of the shares in one of the villages mortgaged to him and the puisne mortgagee discharged the balance due to the prior mortgagee. Held, that the discharge would entitle the puisne mortgagee to step into the shoes of the prior mortgagee and decree-holder to get an order which would authorise him to sell up the share in the other village mortgaged to the prior mortgagee and to recover thereby the balance which he had paid in full satisfaction of the decree held by the prior mortgagee. The sale of the mortgaged property by public auction was not essential. UDIT NARAIN SINGH v. BAQUR SAJJAD, A.W.N. 1905, 124=2 A.L.J. 353.

(1015)—Ss. 89 and 90—Execution of decree—Mortgage—Order absolute for sale of part only of the mortgaged property—Property sold insufficient to satisfy the mortgage-debt—Application for personal decree against mortgagor. — A mortgagee in a suit for sale of the mortgaged property obtained a decree for sale of the whole; but, when applying subsequently for an order absolute for sale, relinquished his claim as against part of the mortgaged property and took an order for sale of part only, and that order became final. The property ordered to be sold was brought to sale, but realized an amount insufficient to satisfy the decre. Held, that the decree-holder was, under these circumstances, competent to apply for and obtain a personal decree against the mortgagor under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. (1016)—Ss. 89 and 90—Sale of part of mortgaged property with judgment-debtor's consent in England—Effect of suit in Chancery Court—Limitation.—Certain shares in a Railway belonging to the defendant were ordered to be sold under s. 89 of the Act. At the request of the defendants, they were sent to England for sale through a broker. The defendant gave a power of attorney in favour of the Bank and also gave the stock certificate. The Railway Company declined to act on the power of attorney or the transfer in Bank. The Bank instituted a suit in the Court of Chancery in England and obtained a decree for sale and sold the stock. The proceeds of sale having proved insufficient, the Bank put in the present application for a decree under s. 90. Held, that the sale, which took place in England, must be treated to be a sale had, in connection with the decree passed in this country, but carried out by the parties independently of the Court in this country at the express instance of the defendants, judgment-debtors, and that they could not be heard to say that the sale was not in pursuance of the order for sale passed under s. 89. Held, further, that unless the Railway stock was sold, the defendants could successfully object to the application under s. 90. The stock having been sold, the decree under s. 90 should be passed. GAJADHUR LAL v. ALLIANCE BANK OF SIMLA, 3 A.L.J. 445=28 A. 660. (A.W.N. 1899, 208, 22 A. 404, R.)

A joint decree was passed against all the defendants; the property was sold but the proceeds were insufficient to satisfy the decree. In the meantime S died and the decree-holder applied for a decree against the defendants under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act: Held that no decree could be made against the defendants under the section as they were not the mortgagors in the sense of being executants of the mortgage-deed and it was not shown that they got any assets from S so as to attract upon themselves the liability of S; that the meaning of the mortgage decree which was passed against them on the ground of benefit meant only that the mortgaged property was liable to sale, and that the personal liability must be made out on the terms of the mortgage bond. (1031)—S 90 – Mortgage—Personal covenant to pay—Limitation.—A mortgage bond provided that for the payment of the amount borrowed, the immoveable property mentioned in it should be held as collateral security, and that, "in case of the hypothecated property being insufficient for the satisfaction of the entire amount of the bond, the creditors would be at liberty to realize the amount remaining due from the obligors personally and from their other property." About 10 years later, the mortgagee brought a suit and obtaining a decree under s. 8 of the Transfer of Property Act brought the property to sale. The proceeds of the sale having proved insufficient, the mortgagee applied for a decree under s. 90. This application was within three years from the date of the sale. Held that on the date on which the plaintiff brought his suit upon his mortgage, his claim for a personal remedy was time-barred, because the cause of action for both the personal liability and the liability of the property was a single one, viz., a breach of the conditions of the bond, and no fresh cause of action could arise at the time when the property was found insufficient to completely satisfy the bond; and therefore, the balance of the amount of the mortgage was not legally recoverable on the date of the application under s. 90. Under this decree the mortgaged property was brought to sale, and subsequently an application was made for the sale of the non-hypothecated property included in the decree. No objection on the score of the incorrectness of the decree was taken at the time by the judgment-debtor, but two applications were made by the judgment-debtor for postponement of the sale and were granted. At a later date the judgment-debtor applied under s. 206 of Code of Civil Procedure for amendment of the decree by striking out of it the non-hypothecated property. This application was granted and the decree limited to the hypothecated property, which had already been sold. The decree-holder thereupon applied for a decree under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. Held that the period of limitation for such an application must, under the circumstances, be deemed to start from the time when the decree was amended. It provided that the respondents should pay the sum secured within two years. The appellant filed his suit on the mortgage in January 1897 and obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property. The sale took place and the proceeds proved insufficient to pay the amount due on the mortgage. It was admitted that the interest on the debt had been paid as such within the prescribed period of limitation. The respondent's contention was that notwithstanding the payment of interest the balance was not legally recoverable against any of them, because the time to be regarded in considering whether the balance was legally recoverable was not the date of the suit but the date of the application for a decree under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. Held, that, in considering whether the recovery of the balance remaining due after the sale of the mortgaged property was barred by limitation prescribed by art. 119 of sch. II of the Limitation Act, regard should be had to the date of the suit and not to the date of the application under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act; that that article applied to suits and not to applications and that an application under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, was not a plaint in a suit and could not be regarded as the institution of a suit. (1040) —S. 90 —Mortgage decree —Decree directing sale and personal liability—Second personal decree, if can be passed —S. 90, decree under, when can be passed.—A mortgage-decree which was not merely a decree for sale but also a personal decree against the mortgagor in the event of non-satisfaction of the mortgage dues by sale of the mortgaged properties, was not in strict conformity with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. (26 C. 166, 33 C. 890, 31 B. 244, 22 A. 404, 32 M. 534, R.) A proceeding under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act is a proceeding in a pending suit for a supplementary decree. A decree passed under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act against infants, whose proposed guardian did not accept the office though duly served with notice, and no effective steps were thereafter taken for their representation, was absolutely null and void. (15 C.L.J. 3, R.) Three essential elements must be established before a decree under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act can be obtained, namely, first, that, though there has been a decree for sale and the mortgage property has been exhausted thereunder the sale proceeds have proved insufficient to pay the amount due to the plaintiff ; secondly, that the balance is legally recoverable from the mortgagor otherwise than out of the property sold ; and, thirdly, that a personal decree has not previously been made. (4 C.L.J. 141, 33 C. 867, F.) If the mortgagee-decree-holder had obtained a personal decree against the judgment-debtor, he could not subsequently invite the Court to repeal the operation already performed and thus obtain a second personal decree against the mortgagor. XXXIV, r. 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, where, for one reason or another, he has been unable to bring to sale the whole of the mortgaged property. But a mortgagee cannot obtain a money decree under either s. 90 or O. XXXIV, r. 6, where no portion of the mortgaged property has been sold either by the Court or by private treaty. An application for a money-decree of the kind in question is governed in the matter of limitation by art. 188, Limitation Act (1908), which corresponds with art. 178, Limitation Act (1877). Time begins to run against the applicant as soon as his right to apply for a money decree accrues, and under O. XXXIV, r. 6, the right to apply accrues when the proceeds of the sale are found to be insufficient. BIHARI LAL v. BISHESHAR DAYAL, 9 A.L.J. 569 = 14 Ind. Cas. 591.

P. Act ; Held, that, under the circumstances, the mortgagee decree-holder was entitled to apply for and obtain a personal decree against the mortgagor on abandoning all claim against the property. Obiter.—It is not incumbent on a puisne mortgagee to redeem the prior mortgage. He can do so if he likes. But if he does not elect to redeem, the prior mortgagee's right to sell the property is paramount as against him. LALA RAM RAGHUBIR v. The decree in the present case directed that its amount should be recovered from the mortgaged property first, and that other property should be proceeded against only in the event of the former property failing to satisfy the decree fully. There were two rights given by the decree ; the second depended upon the exercise of the first, which was that arising out of a mortgage decree. In June 1908 the mortgage property was sold in execution of the decree. On the 19th idem D purporting to proceed under the personal decree for the balance, got attached a house belonging to G, which was not comprised in the mortgage. On the 4th August 1903, the sale was set aside on G's application, G then applied on the 17th August 1903 to have the attachment of the house raised. The Court directed the attachment to be maintained but ordered that the property should not be sold until the proceeds were found insufficient. In September 1904, G's son V was born. On the 26th November 1904 the mortgaged property was again sold; and on the 5th January 1905, D applied for sale of the house, whereupon V applied to have the attachment removed from his one-half share in the house: Held, (1) that the decree in so far as it directed personal payment by G was passed in disregard of the provisions of s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act. It was clear from the words of the section that that direction should have been in a supplemental decree to be passed when the net proceeds should be found to be insufficient. The original decree should merely have reserved to the plaintiff liberty to apply for a decree under s. 90; (2) that the personal decree was contingent on the ascertainment of balance and only became operative and capable of execution when that balance was ascertained. It was, therefore, open to V to establish any circumstance which affected the validity of the attachment as against his interest in the house: (3) that, therefore, the house to be extent of V's interest therein should be released from attachment. Civ. Pro. Code, s. 209—S. 209 of the Civil Pro. Code, 1882, relates to a decree for money, and a mortgage-decree, until it reaches the stage shown by s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, cannot be so termed. When a mortgagee is in possession of mortgaged property, the mortgage decree should direct an account of the rents and profits of the property, and that what should be found due on that account should be deducted from what is found due on the general account from the mortgagor to the mortgagee. Held, further, that where the decrees in mortgage suits were not drawn up in the form contemplated by the Civ. Pro. Code and the Transfer of Property Act, a Court would not be justified in the assumption that the mortgagees were not entitled to interest according to the terms of the mortgage bonds until the realization of the mortgage debt. Held, also, that a mortgagee in possession cannot be a trespasser till his final account is taken. (1056)—S. 90—Mortgage—Suit for sale of mortgaged property—Personal remedy against mortgagor or his other property in the event of the mortgaged property not realising sufficient amount—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), Ss. 43, 50—Allegations to be set out in the plaint.—The plaintiff sued on the 18th April, 1899, to recover Rs. 1,999 on a mortgage, dated the 18th April, 1877, by sale of the mortgaged property, and balance if any from the remaining unhypothecated property of the defendant. The decree passed was against the mortgaged property alone. The amount realised by the sale of the mortgaged property having been insufficient to satisfy the decree, the plaintiff applied under s. 90 of the Transfer of Property Act for a further decree against the other property of the mortgagor. The first Court found that the claim for personal decree was time-barred. Before the lower appellate Court it was contended that the mortgagors had paid Rs. 200 as interest which avoided the bar of limitation, and that the plaintiff should have been allowed to adduce proof. The Court negatived the contentions on the ground that they were not mentioned in the original plaint. On second appeal: Held, (1) that the mortgage in suit being of the year 1877, and the suit of the year 1899, the plaintiff's right to a personal decree against the mortgagor was time-barred, the plaintiff having failed to show in the plaint the ground on which exemption from the law of limitation was claimed, (2) that the plaintiff could not be allowed at a very late stage of the suit, to bring forward, for the first time, allegations which it was necessary to prove in order to show that he was entitled to a further decree against the defendant personally. But the mortgage-decree provided that no personal liability could attach to the defendant unless and until the remedy against the property was exhausted. The plaintiff, instead of bringing the property to sale, applied for a money-decree in execution under s. 90 of the Act. Held, that a sale, or at least an attempt to sell, is a necessary condition precedent to the passing of the money-decree under s. 90, unless something happened subsequently to the passing of the conditional decree which had the effect, wholly or in part, of extinguishing or casting a cloud over the title of the mortgagor. (1086)—S. 91—Equity of redemption split up —Right of redemption of whole or part of mortgaged property.—S. 91 of the Transfer of Property Act does not lay down that a person who is entitled to a share only of the equity of redemption has, under all circumstances, the right to insist on redeeming the whole of the mortgage and recovering possession of the whole of the mortgaged property. Where there are several persons in whom the equity of redemption is vested, there is no reason why one of them and the mortgagee acting together should not be held to be entitled to deal with his interest in the equity of redemption and the mortgagee's right as against him, provided the rights of the other owners of the equity of redemption are not thereby injuriously affected. The objection to a mortgagee's splitting up of a mortgage is entitled to weight only where the owner of the part of the equity of redemption is prejudicially affected by the splitting. The question whether the Court will allow redemption of the whole of a mortgage at the instance of a person entitled to a part only of the equity of redemption must depend on the circumstances of each case and the rights acquired by the mortgagee or by third persons subsequent to the mortgage. In deciding whether good cause for extension of time has been shown, all the circumstances of the case must be looked at. Thus, where the mortgagor tendered the mortgage-money to the mortgagee prior to suit, which was instituted in consequence of the refusal to accept it on the part of the mortgagee who claimed to have bought it outright, and an appeal had been filed by the mortgagee against the decree for redemption, and in asking for extension of time the mortgagor alleged poverty and difficulty of raising money pending the appeal, it was held that a good cause for extension of time had been made out. It has been held that "the Court" mentioned in paragraph 4 of s. 93 to which an application for an order for sale should be made is the Court of first instance and not the appellate Court, and so also the Court mentioned in the last paragraph is the same Court and therefore an application for enlargement of the time fixed by the decree for payment will have to be made to the Court of first instance and not to the appellate Court SHEONARAIN v. Since, in such a case, the mortgagee has, prima facie an immediate right to foreclosure absolute, where the mortgagor comes with the money after the due date, the burden is upon him to explain satisfactorily why he did not bring it punctually. In any other view, a mortgagor, who wilfully allows the due date to pass would be in a better position than one who applies before due date. (25 M. 244, R.) So, a mortgagor, who meets an application for an order of foreclosure absolute, is bound to show good cause for his failure to pay on due date and obtain an order extending the time so as to include the actual date of lodgment. The proviso to s. 93, properly construed, cannot support the contention that the power to enlarge time for payment can be exercised by Courts only before the day fixed for payment, by the decree itself. The language of the whole proviso does not demand that a limited meaning should be attached to it and, as the procedure prescribed by it is borrowed from the practice of the English Courts, it must be construed by the light of that practice, according to which applications for enlarging the time fixed in the decree for redemption are entertained even after the expiry of the prescribed period. (22 B. 771, 26 B. 121, 28 B. 103, F.) In England, the time fixed for payment will not, as a rule, be enlarged in a redemption action ; unless special grounds for such indulgence are shown (19 A. 180, 16 C. 246, 27 C. 705, R.) while in an action for foreclosure, the Court is more lenient and will enlarge the time on terms pending an appeal. Though this distinction is not to be found on comparing s. 87 with s. 93 of the Act (19 M. 40, 21 C. 618, 22 M. 133, 24 A. 479, 25 A. 231, 16 C.P.L.R. 111, R.) yet it would be in accord with the principles of equity to grant indulgence less readily to mortgagors who have sued for redemption, than to those against whom a suit for foreclosure has been brought. The debt in the case of such a payment is entirely discharged and the mortgage is redeemed ; and the redeeming co-mortgagors has no right in the shares of his co-mortgagors other than that of a charge on those shares for the money paid for redemption and the proper costs incurred in so redeeming. (14 A. 1, Diss.; 26 B. 500, F.) Held, further, that the limitation for redeeming the property from the hands of such a cosharer is that of 12 years provided for by art. 144 of the Limitation Act and the limitation runs from the date when the redeeming co-mortgagor sets up his adverse possession. He (the defendant) redeemed the second mortgage and was in possession of the property. The plaintiff sued to enforce his mortgage as also to redeem prior incumbrances : Held, that s. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act did not, in its literal terms, apply to a case where there was no prior mortgage still in existence, but the principles there laid down ought to be followed in dealing with such a case. The plaintiff, who did not deposit the redemption money within the time allowed by Court, can redeem afterwards before a final order is made under cl. (2) of s. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act, that is, before the decree is made absolute. (25 M. 300, F.; 22 B. 771, 16 C. 246, 24 A. 479, R.) The position of the defendant, who is in possession of the property under an obligation to re-transfer it, if the redemption money is paid on a fixed date, is analogous to that of a mortgagee by conditional sale. If a deposit of the redemption money is accepted by the Court before the final order under cl. 2 of s. 93 of the Transfer of Property Act, but after the date fixed for payment, it becomes an effectual deposit, although no formal order extending the time was passed. The Court has power to give effect to the proviso whenever the application for postponement has been made at any time before the final decree—the decree absolute—is made. A decree passed in a suit for redemption under s. 92 of the Transfer of Property Act is only in the nature of a decree nisi, and it is the order passed under s. 93 which is in the nature of a decree absolute, and it is for the mortgagee to get the order made absolute under the latter section. (8 B. 497, R.) The section must be read as if the words "obtains possession" ran as follows— "obtains possession when the mortgagee had possession under his mortgage." Therefore, the section must not be limited in its application to the case of usufructuary mortgages only. (1139)—S. 99—Scope and object of.—This section was enacted with the object of preventing a mortgagee bringing the mortgaged property to sale except in pursuance of the decree obtained in a suit allowed by s. 67. Prior to the passing of Act IV of 1882, it was the constant custom for mortgagees to obtain, on other causes of action than their mortgages, decrees for money against the mortgagor, to bring the mortgaged property to sale in execution of those money decrees, and to have it sold, reserving their rights as mortgagees. The result of that was that, in such cases, the sale being notified as one in which the property to be sold was subject to a mortgage, purchasers would not come forward to run the risk of harassing litigation with the mortgagee in future suits, and the mortgagee or his benamidar was left in possession of the field, and in too many instances purchased the mortgagor's interest in the property for a mere song, and having got by such sale the mortgagor's interest for practically a trifling price, the mortgagee got the whole property into his hands. It was also found that such a state of things encouraged litigation, and it was to provide a remedy and to prevent the recurrence of such a state of things that s. 99 was enacted. MAHABIR SINGH v. S. 99 applies to all cases, whether a suit, under the terms of the mortgage can or cannot be brought under s. 67. The suit was instituted after confirmation of the sale. Held that the provisions of s. 99, Tr. P. Act, having been introduced for the benefit of a particular class of persons and not for the protection of public interests, the sale was not void but voidable only. But the question of setting aside a sale being one arising between the parties to the suit wherein the sale took place, and relating to execution, could not be raised and determined in a suit. It should be raised and tried only in execution proceedings taken under s. 244, Civ. Pro. Code. However, as the Court in which the suit was brought was the tribunal wherein the execution proceedings should have been taken, the plaint could be treated as an application under s. 244, Civ. Pro. Code, if it was possible to do so. But it was not. The sale had been confirmed. The order confirming the sale, being final, precluded the plaintiffs from seeking the relief to which they would otherwise have been entitled. Held, also that the mortgagors were entitled to redeem the mortgage on payment of the amount the mortgagee gave credit for, out of the decree debt due by them in consideration of the purchase in question. (1154)—S. 99—Mortgage—Sale of mortgaged property at the instance of mortgagee in execution of decree for rent—Purchase by mortgagee—Right to possession as purchaser.—The defendant mortgaged a house to the plaintiffs. The mortgage-deed contained no condition for right of entry in default of payment, and no undertaking to repay the principal. The sole conditions were for payment, by the mortgagor, of a certain sum per annum as rent for the occupation of the house, and, in default of payment of rent for one year, for payment of interest at a certain rate on the rent due, and that the mortgagees could recover interest from year to year from the mortgaged property and from the other property of mortgagor. The mortgagees obtained a decree on a compromise in respect of arrears of rent, and in execution the property was sold and purchased by the mortgagees after obtaining permission to bid at the auction. Possession was received by a certificate signed by the mortgagor who remained in possession as tenant. Subsequently, the mortgagor having refused to vacate, the mortgagees sued for possession. It was pleaded that the sale was a nullity and the plaintiffs mortgagees were not entitled to sue for possession otherwise than by filing a suit on their mortgage. Held, that the plea had no force and the plaintiffs were entitled to possession. Afterwards, he brought the present suit for possession of the property as owner. It was pleaded that the suit was bad, for the plaintiff should have proceeded under the Regulation XVII of 1806. The plea was accepted on appeal, and the suit was dismissed, among others, on the ground that the sale was held in contravention of the provisions of s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act. It was contended on revision that the order of dismissal of the suit was wrong, for (1) the plaintiff was not bound to foreclose the mortgage under the Regulation, and Transfer of Property Act was not applicable to the case and (2) that the plea was barred by s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code. Held, that the contentions had no force and there was no material irregularity for the exercise of revisional powers by the Chief Court. If the mortgagee himself becomes the purchaser in execution, the mortgagor may preserve his right to redeem the property (22 M. 347, 22 B. 624, 23 M. 377, R.) on the ground that the mortgagee cannot, by such a sale and purchase in contravention of law, be allowed to free himself from the liability to be redeemed. Code*, s. 244 —Plaint treated as an application under s. 244 —Redemption, suit for.—The plaintiff mortgaged his share with possession to the defendant on the 23rd May, 1885. He sued to redeem his share on payment of Rs. 200. The main defence was that the defendant, in execution of a money decree, not on the mortgage bond, had attached and subsequently put up the mortgaged property to sale and having obtained the permission of the Court to bid at the auction sale, had himself bought the property in dispute on 20th May, 1901 and thereby having purchased the equity of redemption, the plaintiff had no subsisting title to redeem (that the sale was duly confirmed without any apparent objection on the part of the plaintiff) and that having regard to clause (c) of s. 244, C.P.C., no suit could be maintained to set aside the sale and that therefore the suit for redemption could not lie. Held, (per Ryves, A.J.C.), that having regard to the provisions of s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act the sale was not void and could have been avoided at the option of the mortgagor ; that the sale could have been impugned in execution-proceedings under s. 244, C.P.C., and not by a separate suit ; and that the sale not having been impugned but having been confirmed and the order confirming the sale having become final, it could not be set aside under that section. Held further, that the plaint in the suit could be treated as if it had been an application under s. 244, Civ. Pro. Code. Held, (per Scott, J.C.), that the purchase of the equity of redemption by the mortgagee in execution of a money-decree held by him would not be a cause of nullity for want of jurisdiction but a cause of irregularity in procedure only. In s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act the words " the mortgagee—shall not be entitled to bring such property to sale otherwise than by bringing a suit under s. 67, etc ," must be held to mean that the mortgagee has not the right to bring the property to sale in execution of a mere money-decree, but that, if the mortgagor consents, he may do so and in any case the sale is valid until set aside in proceedings properly taken for that purpose. (1163)—S. 99, provisions of, not to be given retrospective effect—Purchase of equity of redemption by mortgagee at Court-sale—Old law.—Prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, the purchaser of a mortgagor's right of redemption by the mortgagee at a Court-sale brought about by the latter in respect of a claim independent of the mortgage had the effect of vesting in the mortgagee-purchaser the whole of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, his mortgagor, in the property mortgaged. The restriction of the rights of, and the disabilities imposed on, the mortgagee purchasing "in execution of a decree for the satisfaction of any claim whether arising under the mortgage or not " by the provisions of s. 99 of the Act are applicable only in the case of proceedings governed thereby. The section cannot be given retrospective effect so as to affect such purchases by mortgagees in judicial sales perfected before Act came into force since the effect of applying it retrospectively will be to unsettle innumerable well-established titles acquired on the faith of the mortgagee's purchase in Court-sale being valid and competent to extinguish the mortgagor's equity of redemption. In execution of a decree for costs and mesne profits against the third party purchasers, the equity of redemption in their hands was brought to sale by the mortgagee and purchased by himself. More than twenty years after the sale, the third party purchasers brought a suit for redemption against the purchasers of the rights of the mortgagee in the property, without making the representatives of the mortgagee parties to the suit. The suit was instituted on the footing that the purchase by the mortgagee in the execution-sale was null and void. Held, a sale held in contravention of s. 99 of the Act, is voidable only, and not void. After the lapse of twenty years, the plaintiffs cannot successfully set up the case that the sale was a nullity. Independently of the provision in s.99 of the Act, a mortgagee is not precluded by law from purchasing the equity of redemption and freeing himself from the liability to be redeemed, provided that the purchase is carried out in complete good faith and no advantage is taken by him of his position as mortgagee. There is no principle upon which such a sale can be impeached merely on the ground that the purchaser was a mortgagee of the purchased property. Obiter dictum.—As the integrity of the mortgage was broken by the purchase, by the original mortgagee, of the equity of redemption in part of the mortgaged property, the plaintiffs would, if they had made the mortgagee's representatives parties to the suit, be entitled to redeem their share in the mortgaged property. The assignee of the decree applied, in execution, for attachment and sale of the equity of redemption of the mortgagor. The mortgagor contended that his rights in the property mortgaged could not be sold (s. 99 of the Act and s. 233, Civ. Pro. Code). Held, that there is no difference between the position of a third person obtaining a simple money-decree against the mortgagor and that of an assignee of a money-decree obtained by the mortgagee not in his capacity as mortgagee, that the assignee, having acquired no rights in respect of the mortgage, does not, in any way, transgress the provisions of s. 99 of the Act by seeking a sale of the equity of redemption. S. 233, Civ. Pro. Code, would not help the mortgagor unless there has been an assignment of the mortgage. BANH BAI v. MANNI LAL, A.W.N. (1903). 42=2 A.L.J. 121=27A 450, (22 C. 813, D.)

In 1892, B advanced to the mortgagor some money, for which a simple money bond was passed. In 1903 B assigned the bond to the plaintiff, who sued the mortgagor and got a money-decree. In execution of this decree the plaintiff attached the property which formed the subject of mortgage and applied to the Court to sell the property subject to the said mortgage. The judgment-debtor objected to this on the ground that the sale of the property was barred by s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882: Held, (1) that the plaintiff was not barred by s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, from bringing the property to sale; (2) that the plaintiff as transferee of the money bond did not take it subject to any liability or equity to which his transferor, the mortgagee, was subject with regard to the mortgaged property. The primary purpose of s.99 of the Transfer of Property Act is to relieve a mortgagee from the restriction placed on the splitting up of his remedies by s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the rest of the restriction imposed by the latter section remains unimpaired. The plaintiffs did not obtain possession. After the expiry of eight years, they sued for sale upon their mortgage but obtained a simple money decree only. They then attached the property mortgaged to them. Held, that s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act prevented the sale of property mortgaged to them in execution of a simple money decree.

S. 90 of Trusts Act, only applies to a case where the mortgagee or other qualified owner of any property has availed himself of his position and has thereby gained an advantage in derogation of the right of other persons. (1174)—S. 99—Execution-sale in violation of—Confirmation of sale—Objection to the validity of the sale, when to be taken—Suit for redemption, effect of sale on.—A usufructuary mortgagee, who had not obtained possession of the property mortgaged, brought a suit and obtained a decree for possession and costs. He, then, assigned the decree as well as the mortgage. In execution of the decree for costs, the equity of redemption of the mortgagors in respect of a portion of the mortgaged property was sold by Court-auction and purchased by the assignee himself. Subsequently, the legal representative of the mortgagors sold their equity of redemption; and the purchaser of the equity of redemption brought a suit against the assignee-purchaser for possession of the mortgaged property by redemption of the mortgage. Held, so far as the portion of the mortgaged property, which was sold in Court-auction, was concerned, the plaintiff could not have any remedy. For, even though the sale was held in violation of the provisions of s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, it was the duty of the mortgagors (judgment-debtors) whom the plaintiff now represents, to object to the sale or to the confirmation of the sale, before the sale was confirmed. Now that the sale was confirmed, the plaintiff who was the representative of the judgment-debtors could not question its validity. But so far as the property, not included in the auction-sale, was concerned, the plaintiff was given a decree for redemption. MADAN MUKUND LAL v. a charge as that defined by s. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, and does not require to be enforced in the same manner, the only consequence, which follows from the provisions that rent is a first charge upon an under-tenure, is, that a sale, held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, produces the effect described in Ch. XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act. A mortgage does, whereas a charge does not, involve a transfer of an interest in specific immoveable property. (25 M. 220, R. & F.). A mortgagee can follow the mortgaged property in the hands of a transferee from the mortgagor, whereas a charge can be enforced against a transferee, only if it is shown that he has taken with notice of the charge. (13 A. 23, R.) Where an instalment bond provided that the executant would be personally responsible for the payment of the money, and that, in case of default, it would be competent to the person, in whose favour it was executed, to institute a suit to obtain a decree and to recover the dues by attachment and sale of an under-tenure. Held—that, upon the terms of the bond, it did not create a mortgage, but merely effected a charge. The words "and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage," in s. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, signify that, if the relation created by the instrument is not that of a mortgagor and mortgagee and immoveable property has been made security for the payment of money, there is a charge on the property; they do not mean that, if the transaction on the face of it purports to be a mortgage, but the instrument is not operative as such, by reason of defective execution or non-compliance with the formalities prescribed by the law, the transaction is converted into a charge. (26 C. 78, 26 C. 246, 32 C. 729, 7 Bom. L.R. 934, R. & F.; 10 M. 509, 24 M. 337, Disappr.) Equity will not contravene the positive enactment or requirements of law and defeat its policy by supplying, under the guise of amending defective instruments, those deficient elements of form, without which the agreement is absolutely void, even as between the parties to it. In the face of the statutory provision contained in s. 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, the Courts in India will not, and cannot, apply indiscriminately the general equitable principle of English rule, namely, that a mortgage which is defective and is inoperative as such, operates as a good equitable lien, if it shows an intention to create a charge. (1199)—S. 101—Charge, keeping alive of—Intention on date of acquisition—Pre-emption—Money due upon mortgage not allowed in pre-emption suit—Price.—In considering the question whether an incumbrance should be deemed to continue to subsist on the ground that the continuance of it was for the benefit of the person who has acquired the property, the point of time to be regarded is the date of the acquisition of the property. If an intention to keep alive a charge on property is inconsistent with real intention of the parties to the deed by which the purchaser of the property takes an assignment of it, the charge cannot be treated as still subsisting, simply because the purchaser afterwards finds that it would have been better for him to have kept the charge alive. Plaintiff, who held a mortgage of 8th January, 1884, over certain property, purchased it by means of two sale-deeds. A suit for pre-emption was brought in respect of it, and the plaintiff claimed the amount due upon his mortgage. By a mistake the date of the mortgage was written as 11th January, 1894. Plaintiff's claim in respect of this amount was disallowed. In a suit for sale upon foot of the mortgage of 8th January, 1884, held that the mortgage became merged in the sale and had not been kept alive for the plaintiff's benefit. A pre-emptor must pay the price actually and in good faith paid for the property by the purchaser, however the price may be made up. JUGAL KISHORE v. v. RAM NARAIN, 9 A.L.J. 226=13 Ind. It protects a purchaser against the claims of puisne incumbrancers, where, holding a prior mortgage, he has purchased the mortgaged property. Where, therefore, a purchaser

Certain notices under s. 106 were sent by post; and the post-peon went to the family dwelling house of the tenants with notices for all the tenants; several of the latter were present, they saw the covers but refused to accept them. Held, that the requirements of s. 106 had been fulfilled. The fact that lease-hold property has descended for one generation does not, as a matter of law, give rise to the presumption that the lessees have a permanent interest. Where evidence is excluded by an original Court and such exclusion is not objected to in the first appellate Court, such objection cannot be raised in second appeal. If the lessor and the lessee agree that the lessee is to have a right to enjoy a property on certain terms and that the fact of the transfer of such right is to be embodied in an instrument to be executed by the lessee only and accepted by the lessor, the lease can be effected by such an instrument, provided it is registered as required by s. 107, Transfer of Property Act. A valid lease may, therefore, be created by a kubuliyat only, which is accepted by the lessor and registered according to law. An agreement to the contrary in s. 110 of the Transfer of Property Act means an agreement as to the terms of the holding over. The agreement need not be express; it may be an implied agreement (32 C. 123, F.) An agreement that a tenant should hold over from year to year is in essence an agreement to grant a lease from year to year and should be by a registered instrument. Consequently, such a tenancy can be created without a registered instrument notwithstanding the provisions of s. 107. December, 1908, advising payment of rent for November and saying that the lease terminated as the godown has been burnt down. The landlord replied that the plaintiffs would continue liable to pay the rent until the godown was cleared and its vacant possession was given to him. The godown remained in the possession of the defendant's insurers, who used it as a storage of salvage, which was not cleared till the 16th February, 1909, and who were consequently not able to give its vacant possession till then. On further correspondence between the plaintiffs and the landlord, the latter insisted upon his right to levy rent till the 16th February 1909. The plaintiffs thereupon sued the defendant to recover the rent for the first five days of December 1908 and rent for use and occupation of the godown from the 6th December 1908 to the 15th February 1909 at the rate of Rs. 1,100 per month. Held, (1) that the plaintiffs could not exercise their option to terminate their lease until they put the landlord in possession of the godown since, if the avoidance of the lease under s. 108 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, was effectual without surrender of vacant possession, the plaintiffs, by failing to give vacant possession, were holding over after the termination of their lease and were liable for rent under an implied monthly tenancy on the same terms as before; and if the avoidance was ineffectual, the lease continued until put an end to by mutual consent. (2) That the defendant continued liable to pay rent to the plaintiffs as long as it was in his occupation on account of his salvage, inasmuch as the abandonment to the insurers by the defendant was effected for his benefit, and in the absence of evidence that the insurers kept the sugar in the godown in spite of protests of the defendant, the latter must as between him and the plaintiffs, be taken to have been in occupation either under his original tenancy or under a similar one resulting from his holding over. (3) That the respective tenancies of the plaintiffs and the defendant terminated upon the landlord entering into possession on the 16th February 1909 by the consent of all parties interested. (4) That, therefore, the defendant was liable to pay to the plaintiffs the amount claimed. SIDICK HAJI HOOSEIN v. BRUEL & CO., 12 Bom. L.R. 1055=8 Ind. Cas. 1049.

(1275)—S. 108—Landlord and tenant--Liability for repairs—Construction of lease.—The lease of a house contained a clause imposing upon the lessee the liability to keep the premises in a good and substantial repair. It contained no express covenant whereby the landlord bound himself to make any repairs or to keep the house fit for habitation. Held, that the lessor was not liable to make good damage caused to the demised premises by earthquake, hurricane or the like. The lessor in a letter to the lessee stated :—" When a house is rented on a repairing lease, the lessee is the person that any mishap to the building is at the risk of the lessee (sic) except damage done from an earthquake and the like," held, that this was no admission that the lessor of his liability to execute repairs made necessary by hurricane, earthquake, and the like ; at most it might indicate that the parties understood that the repairing clause of the lease did not impose upon the tenant a liability to execute structural repairs rendered necessary by any extraordinary cause, such as an earthquake and the like. (1276)—S. 108—Lease—Assignment—Apportionment of rent—Right of assignee from lessee to claim, against lessor.—S. 108, Transfer of Property Act, does not enact any rule regarding the liability of the assignee, but, as the assignee becomes lessee from the date of the assignment, according to the section, he must be held liable for rent accruing after the assignment. An assignee is liable for all breaches of express covenants running with the land accruing after the date of assignment. A covenant to pay rent is one running with the land. The assignee is liable for rent, even though he may not have taken possession, for possession is not the ground of his liability, but privity of estate which is created by the assignment itself. The liability to pay rent is one that can be apportioned, and the assignee can claim apportionment of rent and hold himself liable only for the apportioned rent that became due from the date of assignment in his favour. (c) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, notwithstanding its conditional form, was not intended to make the right to the benefit of the covenant for quiet enjoyment conditional on the actual payment of rent. Even if the clause is to be read as importing a condition it can only be so read in ases where the lessee claims actually to enforce his right to damages for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. The clause does not purport to confer any right or cast any liability on the lessor or the lessee as a matter of law, but to state that a certain contract shall be taken to have been entered into between the parties. S. 108 does not deal with the defence to an action for rent. It enacts that the lessor is bound on the lessee's request to put him in possession of the property, but does not say that, if he does not do so, the lessee is not bound to pay the rent. But there can be no doubt that the Transfer of Property Act has made no change in the rule that non-delivery of possession is a good answer to a suit for rent. Where a tenant is evicted from his holding he becomes entitled to suspension of rent during the period of eviction. There is constructive eviction where the landlord, without turning the tenants out of possession, commits unlawful and wrongful acts which deprive the tenant of the beneficial enjoyment and use of the property; such wrongful acts amount in law to constructive eviction, and the tenant enjoys immunity, from the payment of rent until the landlord again permits him to have quiet enjoyment. The law is the same under the Transfer of Property Act also. A rent-service is something given by way of retribution to the lessor for the land demised by him to the tenant, and consequently the lessor's title to the rent is founded on this, that the land demised is enjoyed by the tenant during the term included in the contract; for the tenant can make no return for the thing he has not; if therefore the tenant be deprived of the thing, the obligation to pay rent ceases; because such obligation had its force only for the consideration, which was the enjoyment of the thing demised. The rule of English law that, where there has been such material obstruction by the landlord of the tenant's enjoyment as would be regarded as tantamount to eviction, the landlord should not be entitled to recover any portion of the rent, is not applicable to India. It is difficult to hold on principle that a landlord is not entitled to any portion of the rent if the tenant remains in possession of a portion of the land let. He must be held entitled to it on the contract of lease, since the tenant prefers not to throw up the lease during the period of eviction, or as compensation for use and occupation. It is reasonable to hold that the tenant where he retains possession of a portion of the land, must be estopped from pleading that he is not liable for the rent of that portion. Strictly speaking, where the tenant has once been let into occupation of the premises leased to him, his right in law, where he is deprived of possession of a part thereof, is only to damages, while he is liable to pay the rent; and it is only a rule of convenience that he should be allowed to enforce his right to damages by setting them off in the landlord's action for rent. (1292)—*S.*108 (e)—Lessor and lessee—Subject of lease damaged by earthquake—Liability of tenant for rent—Permanently and substantially unfit for occupation.—The lessee of a house can avoid the lease, if the house be rendered substantially and permanently unfit for the purpose for which it was let by reason of the earthquake. A house, which was let out to the defendant, was damaged by earthquake. The Engineer, who examined the house, certified that the house was not in imminent danger but that it required immediate repairs in some portions. Held, that the building had not been rendered by the earthquake substantially and permanently unfit for occupation. (1293)—S. 108, cl. (e)—Lease, expiry of, on the premises demised being destroyed by fire.—A tenant has no right to retain possession of the premises till such time as it suits him, and then make the destruction of premises by fire or other causes the ground for putting an end to the lease so far as the remainder of the term is concerned. Both under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and under the common law governing the relations between landlord and tenant, on the determination of a lease, it is the duty of the tenant to put his landlord in vacant possession of the premises let to him. So far as this obligation imposed by law on the tenant is concerned, it does not matter whether the lease came to a termination by an efflux of time or by operation of law on the happening of events contemplated in cl. (c) of s. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act. The true construction to be placed on cl. (e) of s. 108 of the Act is, that, on the demised premises being destroyed or rendered substantially and permanently unfit for the purposes for which they were let, the lessee would have an option by notice to terminate the lease, and that, on such notice being given, the lease should be deemed to have come to an end. On the occurrence of the fire and the destruction of premises let to a tenant, the contract of letting becomes voidable at the option of the tenant, and on that option being exercised it becomes void. The lease does not become void ab initio. BRUEL & CO. v. HAJI SIDICK HAJI IBRAHIM 12 Bom. L.R. 474.

But s. 108 (h), Transfer of Property Act, does not recognise it or the alternative right of compensation. (B.L.R. Sup. 593, 27 M. 211, R.) In order to raise an equitable estoppel against the owner, it is incumbent upon the tenants to show that the conduct of the owner, whether consisting in abstinence from interfering or in active intervention, was sufficient to justify the legal inference that they had by plain implication contracted that the right of tenancy under which the lessees originally obtained possession of the land should be changed into a perpetual right of occupation.—Per Sankaran Nair, J. (dissenting) :—S. 108 (h) only enables tenant to remove his building during the term of the tenancy. But it does not thereby impliedly negative the right to receive any compensation or to remove the same afterwards, if such a right existed prior to its enactment. (27 M. 211, 21 A 496, 6 M. H. In a suit by the reversionary heir of the widow, the question for determination was whether the tenancy became determined by virtue of the claim of the tenant to hold adversely against the landlord. Held, that, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the property being a dwelling house, the tenancy was presumed to be one from month to month, and until the tenancy was legally determined in one of the modes specified in s. 111 of the Transfer of Property Act, limitation did not run against the landlord or his representative in interest, though the tenant might have professed to hold the property adversely to the landlord. When the tenants did not repudiate their lease but rather stuck to it, and only questioned the right of the plaintiffs as transferees from their lessor, the alleged transfer appearing to be of a prior date to the lease. Held—That there was no denial of landlord's title to cause a forfeiture of the tenancy. Where the tenants could not obtain possession of the whole area leased to them, and on reference to their lessors got no satisfaction from them, and then took a lease of the portion of which they could not get possession, from a stranger whom they found in possession. Held, —that there was no renunciation by the tenants of their character as such so as to entail forfeiture. In 1894 the first defendant had obtained a lease of certain villages from the Zemindar of Kalahasti for a period of nine years. In October 1897, the lease was cancelled, and the same was notified by means of takids and beat of tom tom in the villages, and in December 1897, the cancelled leases were restored. The second defendant was let into possession by an arrangement made in February 1898 between his father and the first defendant and sanctioned by the plaintiff. Held, per Munro, J.—That the leases were properly determined. Under s. 111 (g), Transfer of Property Act, 1882, a lease of immoveable property determines by forfeiture, if there is a breach of condition which entitles the lessor to re-enter and if the lessor does some act showing his intention to determine the lease. Per Munro, J.—According to the common law of the land which specially prevails in zamindaris and similar estates, the delivery of possession is by the issue of orders or notices to the karnams and the other village officers whose duty it is to collect rents from persons in occupation of the land, and also, though not invariably by a general proclamation addressed to the royts and others occupying the land giving information of the transfer of possession in question and requiring them to attorn and pay rent to the person giving notice. (25 M.592, R.) Held also (per Munro, J.), that, in this case, the plaintiff was entitled, even in the absence of a prayer for such relief in the plaint, to recover compensation for use and occupation, as the defendants were again let into possession, and that the rent fixed in the leases afforded a fair basis for the amount to be decreed, and that the limitation was three years under art. 115, Limitation Act, 1877. (31 A. 276, F.; 27 C. 239, 22 C. 752, 13 B.L.R. 243, D.) Held, per Abdur Rahim, J.—(1) that the arrangement by the first defendant, lessee, to give a half share of the lease to the second defendant's father, a stranger, did not amount to a surrender impliedly or by operation of law, of a moiety of the lease (2) that the contract between the first defendant and the second defendant's father was one of partnership, and was not a transaction which must be embodied in a registered instrument. Held that an endorsement, by which the landlord waived his objection to the assignment of a portion of his interest by the tenant in favour of a stranger, cannot be said to create an interest in immoveable property, and need not be registered under the terms of s. 17, Registration Act. (25 M. 7, 27 M. 348, R.) If the tenant never acquiesced in the landlord's act determining the tenancy, and the landlord afterwards changes his mind at the request of the tenant himself, one cannot see why he should not be able to waive the forfeiture, so long as the question is one exclusively between him and the tenant. Art. 110 is applicable to suits for rent generally, but art. 116 specially provides for a suit which is based on a contract in writing registered, including a lease. M. CHENGIAH v. (1320)—S. 111, cl. (g)—Forfeiture — Denial of landlord's title—Intention to determine the lease.—The denial of landlord's title by the tenant, in order to work as forfeiture, under s. 111, cl. (g), Transfer of Property Act, must be an unequivocal and unambiguous denial. Held, therefore, that mere non-payment of rent or mortgaging of land stating that the land belongs to the mortgagor is not sufficient to work as a forfeiture of a tenant's interest. The lessor must do some act showing his intention to determine the lease, before he can file a suit for ejectment. The mere filing of the suit by a landlord against a tenant does not amount to doing some act showing the intention of the landlord to determine the lease, within the meaning of s. 111 (g) of the Act. Similarly, if he elects not to enforce the forfeiture, and manifests and communicates to the lessee his intention accordingly, that is, elects to waive the forfeiture, his election is irrevocable. If lessees are re admitted, after the determination of tenancy, by exercise of the right of forfeiture, the old tenancy is not revived and the lessees are liable to pay compensation for use and occupation. CHENGIAH v. DAMARA KUMARA THIMMA, 15 Ind. Cas. 445=24 M.L.J. 263.

(1326)—Ss. 111, 116--Lease—Non-payment of rent--Forfeiture—Covenant for re-entry—Meaning of "express condition".—What is meant by an express condition is, not that the wording of it should be in any particular form, but that the condition can be gathered from the words of the instrument giving to them their ordinary meaning, so that the Court may be certain that such condition was part of the stipulation between the parties and was understood to be so by them. If a clause in a lease is so expressed that it can only be read as reserving the right of forfeiture to the landlord in certain circumstances, that is, sufficiently express within the meaning of the law. Where the lease contains an express provision for re-entry on breach of the conditions of the lease, and the condition as to payment of rent is broken, the non-payment operates as a forfeiture of the lease. If, instead of exercising his right of forfeiture, the landlord allowed the tenant to continue in possession of the premises and treated him as tenant, he must be held to have

S. 2 of the Act expressly provides that nothing contained in the Act shall be deemed to affect any right or liability arising out of a legal relation constituted before the Act came into force. S. 6 of the General Clauses Act (I of 1868) also contains the same reservation. Accordingly, in a suit by a landlord to eject the defendant, his tenant, filed before the coming into operation of the Tr. P. Act, held that ss. 111 (b) and 116 of the Act did not apply and no notice to quit was necessary. Before the Tr. P Act came into force in Bombay, a tenant other than a monthly tenant, holding over on the terms of his lease, was entitled to a reasonable notice to quit. What is a reasonable notice is always a question of fact dependent on custom and contract, but in the absence of an express stipulation or local usage to the contrary, it has been held that six months' notice is reasonable in the case of lands. (9 C. 48, 6 B. 70, R.) Disclaimer of the plaintiff's ownership after the institution of the suit for ejectment, and in the written statement, has not the effect of dispensing with the obligation of giving reasonable notice. For the disclaimer to have such effect, it must have been made before the institution of the suit for ejectment. AMBABAI v. BHAN, 20 B. 759.

In order to make a gift complete, it is well-settled both in England and British India that the donor must do all he can to make the gift complete.

Per Chamier, J.—A gift duly made and accepted is not invalid merely because it was registered afterwards against the wishes of the donor. Registration is not the act of the donor, but the act of an officer appointed by law to register documents. A document need not even be presented for registration by the executant. Consent to the registration of a deed of gift is not part of the gift. The expression "registered instrument" in s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act means an instrument registered in accordance with the provisions of the Registration Act, and not necessarily an instrument registered with the consent of the executant donor. —Money due on Insurance policy—Debt.—V (the plaintiff) held two policies upon the life of D (issued by two different companies), which had been deposited with him by D as security for pecuniary liabilities incurred by V from time to time on D's behalf. Those liabilities amounted in April 1909 to Rs. 75,000. Before they fell due, D committed suicide on the 28th August 1909 without meeting any of the liabilities. V had, therefore, to deposit security in September 1909 with the creditors against his obligations. On the 4th September 1909, V gave notice to the agents of the Insurance Company issuing one of the policies that he held that policy on D's life as security for the advances made by him to D. The agents informed V that, on the day before D's death, they had received for registration a deed of assignment of that policy in favour of M (the defendant). The deed was dated the 13th August 1909. In a suit by V to recover the amount of the policy from the company, M claimed payment of the money in preference to V. The lower Court dismissed the suit, holding that M, who had a legal estate in the policy in virtue of the assignment, had priority over V who had only an equitable charge on the policy. On appeal: Held, (1) that the policy moneys were a debt not secured by hypothecation of property: they did not constitute a debt payable in praesenti before the death of the assured, but a conditional and contingent debt within the meaning of the Transfer of Property Act, the contingency being the death of the assured and the condition the proof of death and of title to the policy. (2) That the defendant was, by his assignment, the transferee for consideration of an actionable claim against the Insurance Company, subject, however, to the conditions imposed by the terms of the policy upon his transferor and, as provided by s. 132 of the Act to all other liabilities and equities to which his transferor was subject in respect thereof at the date of the transfer. (3) That the plaintiff did, by the deposit of the policy and the obligation incurred by him on the security thereof, acquire a charge on the policy and the money secured by it. (4) That, under the amended chap. VIII of the Transfer of Property Act, the validity of the transfer in no way depended upon the giving of notice to the debtor, although notice was necessary to prevent the debtor from dealing with the debt to the prejudice of the assignee. (5) That transferees under the Act took in order of date and acquired no priority by giving notice; the defendant, therefore, could take no advantage by his notice of the 27th August 1909 to the company. (6) That, assuming that V could acquire a charge by virtue of the deposit of the policy the defendant could only prove title to the policy subject to that charge, as he was in effect in no better position than his assignor D. (1392)—Ss. 130, 135—Assignment of rights under simple mortgage before date for payment, not a transfer of an actionable claim.—"Actionable claim" in s. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act refers only to claims capable of enforcement, at the time of assignment, by suit in the Civil Court. It does not include a claim, in respect of which the cause of action had not arisen at the time of the transfer, but which, in future, will mature into a claim so as to be enforceable at once; in other words, a claim could not be treated as an actionable one unless, at the date of the transfer, an action could have been brought thereon. Consequently, where an assignment of a simple mortgage took place before the debt for which the mortgage was security became due and payable, and consequently before a suit could have been maintained for the payment of that debt and for the enforcement or discharge of the debt, by sale of the mortgaged property, such an assignment would not constitute a sale of an actionable claim within the meaning of s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act. (1398)—S. 131—Transfer of debt—Necessity for express notice of transfer to debtor—Right of transferee to sue—Discharge of debtor by payment to original creditor.— Where a debtor did not receive express notice of the transfer of the debt within the meaning of s. 131 of the Act he was not bound to pay the debt to the transferee and a payment by him to his creditor discharged him of the liability. The words "otherwise aware of the transfer" in s. 131 of the Act meant "aware of the transfer in some way similar to that of being a party to it." The section did not however, take away the right of a transferee to sue in equity, but only stated that a transfer of a debt had not any operation against the debtor until express notice thereof was given to him. So then the result was that the transferee had a right to sue for the debt, but the debtor could plead payment to the original creditor, in which case, the transferee, if he said that payment was invalid as having been made after the transfer, was bound to show that the debtor had express notice, or was a party to or otherwise aware of the transfer. (1400)—S. 131—Assignment of mortgage—Notice to mortgagor, if necessary.—S. 131 of the Transfer of Property Act makes inoperative any assignment of any interest in moveable property, only when made without notice of assignment to the debtor, and it has no application to an assignment of a mortgage security by the mortgagee. So, the assignee can bring a suit to enforce the lien without giving notice to the mortgagor. VILAYAT ALI v. GULLO, A.W.N. 1885, 282. [R., 16 A. 315.]

(1401)—S. 131—Mortgage-debt, assignment of—S. 131, before amenament—Payment to mortgagee after assignment without notice, if valia.—The validity of an assignment of a mortgage-debt by the mortgagee is to be tested with reference to the law as it stood at the time when it was made. (27 M. 131, 6 C.L.J. 572, F.) The provision of s. 131 of the Transfer of Property Act, before its amendment in 1900, was applicable to cases of assignment of mortgage debts. Under that section, the assignment could have no operation against the mortgagors, so long as express notice of the transfer was not given to them, unless they were parties to or otherwise aware of such transfer (21 C. 568, F.) Although it is not necessary to give notice to the mortgagor, to validate a transfer by the mortgagee, any payment to the mortgagee, after assignment without notice, is a good payment as against the transferee. ISMAIL MOLLAH v. JADUNATH SRIMANI, 13 C.L.J. 641.

(1402)—S. 131—Suit by assignee of actionable claim—Denial of transfer by debtor—Necessity for proving transfer.—Where in a suit by the assignee of an actionable claim the debtor pleaded that he had no knowledge of the transfer, the debtor's denial did not in any way affect the question of the interpretation of s. 131 of the Act; it merely imposed on the plaintiff the obligation of proving the transfer. The suit could not be dismissed on that account. ALISHA PARDHAN v. ZITOO RAJPUT, 7 C.P.L.R. 82. (2 C.P.L.R. 1, 10 A. 20; 12 C. 506; 10 M. 290, R.)

(1403)—S. 131—Decree—No debt.—A decree is not a "debt" within the meaning of that word as used in s. 131 of the Transfer of Property Act, so as to make the transfer of the decree void without express notice. A debt under the section is an actionable claim, and not a claim that has already passed into a decree. S. 131 does not apply to decrees. AFZAL v. RAM KUMAR BHUDRA, 12 C. 610. [F., 24 B. 502.]

(1404)—S. 131—Mortgage before Transfer of Property Act—Assignment of mortgage after the Act—Applicability of the Act—Assignment of mortgage — Notice — Assignment by mortgagee without notice — Liability of mortgagor to assignee.—To an assignment, made after the Transfer of Property Act, of a mortgage executed before it came into force, the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act are applicable. [R., 21 C. 568, F.B., 16 A. 315, F.B., 18 A. 265, F.B.] The notice of an assignment of a mortgage under s. 131 of the Transfer of Property Act is only to protect the assignee, whose title as against third parties would not be complete without it; an assignment would, however, be perfectly valid without such notice. [F., 10 A. 20; R., 2 C.P.L.R. 1, 7 C.P.L.R. 82.] A suit by the assignee of a mortgagee against the mortgagor and the mortgagee, where no notice of the assignment had been given to the mortgagor under s. 131 of the Transfer of Property Act, was held wrongly dismissed merely on account of the want of notice, as the transfer would come into operation on the institution of the suit, when the mortgagor would have become aware of the transfer. [F., 10 M. 289. 21 B. 60.] This section enacts the English law on the subject; the first branch of the section fixing the time when the assignment comes into operation, and the other branch providing for the protection of the debtor, if he deals with the debt before that time. Act, it was the assignee of the debt upon whom it was incumbent for his own protection to give notice of the assignment to the debtor. In the Act, no provision is made for the assignee giving notice in any particular way. All that is required is that the debtor shall become aware of the transfer. When he becomes aware of it, it is binding on him. Accordingly, if the assignee, the moment before suit, makes the debtor aware of the transfer, the latter must give effect to it. So, when the debtor is, by the service of the writ in the suit against him, made aware of the transfer, it becomes binding on him. RAGHO v. NARAYAN, 21 B. 60

Where an assignment of the right to recover the subscriptions received by A from B has been made by the latter in favour of C, and a suit was brought by C against A to recover the debt due and B was also made a party thereto, held that, though the plaintiff as chargee may not be entitled to the whole debt assigned by way of security, still, as the original creditor is a party to the suit, there can be no objection to his recovering. (b) that an offer to pay after judgment is neither a payment within the meaning of s. 135 nor a proper tender. PANDIT CHARAN SIRKAR v. GANGADHAR DAS, 2 C W.N. 147. (23 C. 713, R.)

(1416)—S. 135—Right of mortgagee under mortgage, not actionable claim.—In the case of the transfer of a mortgagee's rights under his mortgage, the subject-matter of the assignment, that is, the mortgagee's interest in specific immoveable property, constitutes a legal estate and cannot be treated as an actionable claim subject to the rule of s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act that the assignee thereof can recover only a sum limited to the consideration which he has paid for the assignment MOTI RAM v. JETH MAL, 16 A. 313. [R., 16 A. 315, 18 A. 265.]

(1417)—S. 135—Right of assignee of actionable claim, to recover only price actually paid.—The object of s. 135 is the prevention of speculation in actionable claims, or, in other words, the buying cheap of the right of action of one person against another. If a person, having an actionable claim against another, chooses to sell it cheap, or for less than its actual value, the person who buys embarks more or less on a speculation, which on the plain terms of s. 135 can be defeated by the payment to him of the price he had actually paid for it. The mere fact that the party liable to the claim has put the assignee in the position of proving his case in Court cannot be taken to put the latter in any higher or better position. The Legislature could not have intended any difference in the status of the assignee after suit and decree and before the same. What cl. (d) of s. 135 really means is that, if a creditor or party having an actionable claim against another, has put it into Court and has proceeded to proof of it to the point at which judgment has been delivered affirming it, or the liability of the defendant has been so clearly established that judgment must be delivered against him, then the mischief or danger of any trafficking or speculation in litigation disappears, and the defendant can suffer no

(1420)—S. 135—Actionable claim—Payment price paid by assignee need not necessarily be before judgment.—The object with which s. 135 was enacted was to discourage trafficking in litigation by precluding the purchaser of an actionable claim from recovering anything beyond the actual price paid by him and the incidental expenses of the sale together with interest. That object would be defeated if it is held that a debtor could not avail himself of the provisions of the section, if he put the assignee to proof of the price paid by him and waited till the amount of the price had been determined and declared by the Court. The section provides, no doubt, that the debtor is discharged by payment to the assignee of the price and incidental expenses and interest on the price, but it does not limit the period within which the payment must be made in order to secure a discharge. And there is nothing, therefore, in the section, which would preclude the debtor from securing his discharge by payment after decree. PHUL CHAND v. (1423)—S. 135—Assignee of mortgage, entitled only to price paid by him to assignor—Conditional tender, not sufficient payment—Mortgage for cash advanced—Interest payable in grain—Applicability of the rule of damdupat.—S. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act, enables a person against whom an actionable claim exists, whether disputed or not, to free himself from his obligation for its fulfilment by paying to the assignee by purchase of the claim, the price and incidental expenses of the sale with interest on the price from the day that the buyer paid it. The time within which an obligation when assigned can thus be got rid of, is not limited by the Act; and hence payment into Court after suit brought to recover the claim fulfils its conditions, if made before the claim is made clear by evidence and is ready for judgment. In this case, the question had to be decided whether the defendants had made proper payment within the meaning of s. 135 of the Act. They had (without admitting the mortgage debt upon which they were sued, in their representative capacity, or that anything was due under it) brought into Court the amount which the plaintiff had paid for the assignment of the mortgage, but said that they did not admit that the plaintiff's assignor was the person entitled to the mortgage, or the assignment to the plaintiff, and were only willing that the amount should be paid to the plaintiff if it be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that he was the person entitled to recover the mortgage debt. This tender by payment into Court amounted only to a conditional tender, and did not constitute such a payment as is contemplated by s. 135. Further, the rule of damdupat being held to be applicable to the mortgage in this case—the advance having been in cash though the interest was to be paid in grain—the first Court's decree was restored with the variation that the interest must be limited to the amount of the mortgage debt. (1435)—S. 135 (b), in applicability of the section where the entire consideration is not the debt alone.—The question in this case was whether, under s. 135 (b) of the Act (in its chapter VIII as it stood prior to its amendment by Act II of 1900, s. 4) the plaintiffs could recover, on account of a legacy assigned to them, only the amount actually paid, with interest. One part of the consideration for the transfer was a debt due by the transferor to the transferees but the other part was cash paid. Held, the case could not be brought within the exception in the said s. 135 (b), viz., "where it is made to a creditor in payment of what is due to him." Those words could only apply to cases where the entire consideration is the debt. To hold otherwise would, in effect, be varying the language materially and would make the clause run as if the words were "in payment wholly or in part of what is due to him." CHINNAM RAJAMANNAR v. Objection was raised to the validity of the assignment on the ground that it was opposed to public policy as intended to encourage speculative litigation but it was held not to be void for that reason because inasmuch as the right transferred by the assignment had, after contest, been established by a judicial tribunal, it could not be regarded as a transaction entered into with the object of stirring up unrighteous litigation. On the other question as to whether the assignee was entitled to the whole amount decreed by the Mauritius Court or only to the amount, if any, which he had actually paid, the law of Mauritius having to be applied, the defendant was held to be bound to pay the whole amount decreed by that Court. In the case of judgment-debts, so far as any locality can be ascribed to them, they are generally deemed to be incurred in the place where the judgments were passed, and consequently the law of that place must regulate the liabilities of the judgment debtor, wherever the assignment might have been made and the debtor cannot seek to lessen his liability, as it cannot be increased, by recourse to the law of the place of assignment. Assuming that the provisions of s. 135, Transfer of Property Act was applicable to the case, the foundation on which the rule in that section rests, viz., the preventing of commerce in litigation to the detriment of the debtor was absent here. Also the word 'judgment' in cl. (d) may well be taken to include foreign judgments. Where the words in a statute are wide enough and the giving effect to them in their wide sense would be in harmony with the rules of international law, those words ought to be construed in such wide sense. (1)— Reg. XI of 1832—Finder of property—Ownership of property undiscovered—Property hidden in chamber specially appropriated to that purpose—Trespasser—Notice.—A Zemindar has no title to what has been hidden in former times in the soil now belonging to him. Where certain idols were accidentally found by a person and it was found that the idols were hidden in a stone chamber appropriated specially to that purpose, and not accidentally buried in the position which they would ordinarily occupy in a Hindu temple, the Zemindar could not claim a title to the idols as owner so as to defeat the rights of the finder under Reg. XI of 1832. [R., 19 B. 668, 31 M. 397 = 4 M.L.T. 219.] It may be that the Legislature did not intend that the right under Reg. XI of 1832 should arise to the finder if the discovery were made in the course of a wilful trespass upon the lands of another with an immediate view to such discovery. But where the finding is accidental, there is nothing in the language of the Regulation to restrict the benefit it holds out to cases in which the property is found hidden in the soil of the finder. Though the Regulation requires immediate notice by the finder, yet, where it was found that within 3 or 4 days of the property being discovered it was in the hands of the authorities, they might be said to have supplied the necessary notice, which if given on the third or fourth day after the discovery, would probably be early enough to satisfy the requirements of the Regulation. To grow trees on another's land is not an easement. An agricultural tenant has got a right to claim ground-rent for the use and occupation of the land by trees of another, who is not his landlord. The mere fact that no objection was taken to the presence of the trees for a number of years and no claim for renumeration was made does not perpetually bar him from claiming ground-rent afterwards. (10)—Owner may chop off penetrating roots—No notice necessary, if he does not trespass on the other's land.—Every owner is under an obligation not to allow the boughs of his tree to grow so as to overhang, or the roots of his tree to extend so as to penetrate, his neighbour's land, to the detriment of the latter. The owner of a land which is overhung by trees may, without notice, if he does not trespass on his neighbour's land, cut the branches, so far as they overhang and however long previously they have overhung his land. (Lemmon v. Webb, 1895, A.C. 1, 19 B. 420, R.) No prescriptive right can be acquired to compel a man to submit to the penetration of his lands by the roots of a tree planted on his neighbour's soil, and a man may consequently abate any such encroachment upon the property by cutting the roots in the same manner that he may remove the overhanging branches, (Norris v. Baker, 1 Roll. Rep. 393, R.) LAKSHIMI NARAIN BANERJEE v. TARA PROSANNA BANERJEE, 31 C. 944=8 C.W.N. 710.

(11)—Trees standing on a plot within Zemindari pass with the Zemindari.—Trees standing on a plot of land within a Zemindari are appurtenant to the Zemindari and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, pass on along with it. ONKAR DAS v. CHOTE LAL, 11 Ind. Cas. 192.

(12)—Landholder and tenant - Trees—Respective rights of both in trees growing on tenant's holding.—A tenant, who takes land for agricultural purposes, commits a breach of contract when he, without the zemindar's permission, plants trees thereon; and cases to remove such trees and cancel sales of such trees have been heard and decided by the Civil Courts. In the absence of a custom to the contrary, the property in timber growing on a tenant's holding vests in the zemindar, and neither party has the right to cut and remove the timber without the consent of the other. LACHMAN DAS v. MOHAN SINGH, 9 A.L.J. 672.

(13)—Hereditary cultivator—Zemindar if entitled to cut down trees in hereditary holding.—The wajib-ul-arz in this case contained a provision to the effect that a hereditary cultivator, though at liberty to cut trees growing on the holding for the manufacture of implements of husbandry and the repair of his house, shall not be entitled to sell them to others. The object of such a provision is to secure an asset in case of default by the tenant and to prevent waste by him. It was therefore held that from such a provision it cannot be inferred that the zemindar can cut and sell the trees without the tenant's consent. Such right cannot be claimed by the zemindar in the absence of a provision in the wajib-ul-arz or of proof of custom in his favour. NIKKA v. LUKHA, 95 P.R. 1867. [F., 61 P.R. 1881; R., 61 P.R. 1873, 9 P.R. 1904, Rev.=45 P.L.R. 1905; D., 4 P.R. 1875.]

cannot cut them and cannot sell them. Similarly the proprietor cannot, unless the wajib-ul-arz or custom empowers him so to do, cut down trees on the land in the occupation of the hereditary cultivator, without his consent. Where, however, the trees happen to be fruit trees planted and nourished under the care of the proprietor and in his possession, he could appropriate them to his own use if he liked, being possessed of the entire use and the proprietary right in the trees, such case being different from the one where hereditary cultivator nas an interest in the preservation of the trees to use for his agricultural occasions and needs by custom. (16)—Ownership—Land belonging to shrine—Decree against mutawali — Attachment of trees—Presumption.—In execution of a money decree against a mutawali, the decree-holder cannot attach a tree planted by the predecessor of the mutawali on land admittedly belonging to the shrine. A mutawali cannot acquire any property in a tree planted by him on land belonging to a shrine. Nor can any benefit which he might have derived, by taking the fruit of the tree, enable him to acquire any right of ownership in the tree as against the shrine. Merely because the defendant was a cultivator, the lower Courts should not have taken it that it would follow as a legal and logical consequence that the defendant could not be a trespasser. in addition to damages, even though there was no material injury suffered by him. An appellate Court, which finds that there was some encroachment on plaintiff's land, is bound to find the least extent of the encroachment, if it could not find the actual extent of the encroachment. (9)—Injunction—Suit to close doors opened by a person in his own wall—Possibility of committing trespass—Possibility of injury.—A suit to close doors opened by a person in his own wall, on the ground of the possibility of his committing trespass on the plaintiff's land or of his having actually committed trespass, is not maintainable. Unless the opening of the doors is in itself such an irremediable injury to the plaintiff that he would not be sufficiently compensated for by money damages, the Court would, under no circumstances, order the doors to be closed up. GIBBON v. ABDUR RAHMAN KHAN, 3 B. L. R. A. C 411. [R., 10 A. 358=A. W. N. 1888, 135]

(10)—Suit to close door—Trespass apprehended—Injury.—In a suit for the closing of a door opened in a wall adjoining certain land, over which the plaintiffs claimed certain right allowed them by the zamindars, in whom the property in the land was said to be vested, it was held that the wall being the wall of the defendant's house, they had prima facie a right to make a door-way in it, and so long as no injury was done to the plaintiffs' rights, they could have no ground of action. If the door were so turning on its hinges that when opened it disturbed the enjoyment by the plaintiffs of their rights in the land, they might bring a suit to have the obstruction removed. But no suit for the closing of the door would lie simply on the ground that the plaintiffs apprehended trespass on their land. PARUM SOOKH v. SEETA RAM, 2 Agra 119.

(11)—Opening doors on one's wall—Another's land running up to and bordering on wall—Inference—Trespass.—Under ordinary circumstances, a man may open a door or a window in his wall. But where A opens a door in his wall, and it appears that the land up to the wall of A's house is B's land which runs up to and borders on the wall of A, and that, if a person comes out of the new door of A's house, he must pass on and over B's land, and similarly any person going into the house would have to pass over that land, the necessary inference is that A's object in opening the door is to use it and to walk therefrom over B's land, and B is perfectly entitled to protect himself from this being done. If a police-officer, whilst lawfully conducting a search, assaults some person on the premises, his entry on the premises does not necessarily become unlawful from the outset. In all cases of action for trespass to the person of the servant, it is necessary for the master to prove that he has, to some extent at least, been deprived of the services of his servant, owing to the wrongful act of the alleged trespasser. When a statute creates a special right, but certain formalities have to be complied with, antecedent to the exercise of that right, a strict observance of the formalities is essential to the acquisition of that right. In a general search for arms under s. 25 of the Indian Arms Act, 1878, the Magistrate, holding such search, must first record the grounds of his belief as directed therein in order to avail himself of the protection of that section from the consequence of his action. A Magistrate can only conduct a search under s. 105 of the Code of Criminal Procedure when he is competent to issue a search warrant under s. 96 of that Code which applies to the issue of a search warrant by the Court. Per Maclean, C.J.—Where there are special provisions in an Act of Legislature dealing with the case of a search for arms and laying down what are the conditions precedent to making such a search and there are general provisions in another Act of the Legislature dealing with searches generally, and in point of fact, the search was one made for arms, it ought—in the absence of evidence to show that the search was made under the general as opposed to the specific legislation—to be taken that the search was not made under the general provisions authorising searches, and, especially so, when the search was made by one who in the circumstances, had no power of search under the general provisions as to searches. The scheme as regards searches under the Code of Criminal Procedure is as follows:—(1) The Court can issue a search warrant under s. 96, or (2), in lieu of that, the Magistrate may himself search under s. 195, and (3) s. 165 deals with searches by a police officer and not by a Magistrate. The duties of a Magistrate in this country are at once executive and judicial. If a search is conducted by a Magistrate in his executive capacity, he cannot rely on Act XVIII of 1850 as a protection from the consequences of holding a search. Per Hamington, J.—Where a statute authorises the doing of an act which is prima facie a wrong to an individual, the doer must comply strictly with the conditions imposed by the statute, if he desires to rely on the statute as a justification for his act. A Magistrate cannot be said to be acting judicially in directing a search to be made without any proceeding having been instituted before him, which he would be called on to determine judicially. The respondent, though successful, was not allowed his costs, for pressing charges of malice against the appellant which were held to be unfounded. L. O. CLARKE v. Trespass to Goods.

(1)—Compensation—Damage—Land Revenue Code—(Bom. Act V of 1879), s. 43, Rule 38—Natural product—Imposition of fees for excavated stones and earth—Trees.—The plaintiff took a plot of land at Matheran from the Government (defendant), under a lease, the conditions of which were that he (plaintiff) should build one bungalow and that he should not carry on any excavation on the land without the previous permission in writing of the Collector. The plaintiff then applied for right to dig stones for building purposes. This permission was given. Later on, while the bungalow was in course of construction, the plaintiff was required by the Superintendent of Matheran to erect boundary pillars on his land: in constructing these he used stones which had previously been excavated under the permission already granted. Upon this the defendant called upon the plaintiff to pay for the stones so used and on his declining to do so, the sum (Rs. 2-8-0) was realized by attachment and sale of the plaintiff's moveable property. The plaintiff, thereupon, filed this suit praying, inter alia, for damages (Rs. 200) in recovering the amount realized from him: Held, (1) that the suit was one for damages in respect of trespass to goods, and that he was entitled to recover from the defendant Rs. 2-8-0; (2) that the plaintiff was not liable under s. 43 of the Land Revenue Code, 1879, for unauthorizedly removing "any other natural product" from the land, since the expression does not include excavated stones; (3) that under Rule 38 of the Land Revenue Code, 1879, the Collector was not justified in recovering fees for excavated stone used by the plaintiff in erecting boundary pillars. The seller, apprised the purchasers of the delivery, who elected to pay for the goods by a bill which the sellers having drawn, was duly accepted by the purchasers. The sellers retained the mate's receipts for the goods, but the master signed the bill of lading in the purchasers' names, who, while the bill they accepted was running became insolvent. In such circumstances, held, by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (reversing the verdict and judgment of the Supreme Court at Bombay), that trover would not lie for the goods, for that, on their delivery on board the vessel, they were no longer in transitu, so as to be stopped by the sellers; and that the retention of the receipts by the sellers was immaterial, as, after their election to be paid by a bill, the receipts of the mate were not essential to the transaction between the seller and purchaser. Trust—continued.

(1)—Trusts in Hindu law—English Law, how far applicable.—Trusts are no more strange to the Hindu than to the English system of law. But, while the substantive Hindu law insists as strongly as any on the suppression of fraud and the fulfilment of promises, it fails to furnish the detailed rules by which effect is to be given to its principles in cases of trust. It contemplates no such power and flexibility in the legal machinery as are an integral element of the English equity system. If, therefore, the Court is called on to give to a trust in any given case, it looks, indeed, to the Hindu law of property to determine the estate of the trustee; but, in many of the duties it annexes to that estate, the right it recognizes as arising from the position of beneficiaries, and the means by which their rights are made effectual, it is governed by the rules of English equity. There are no others that it can apply. It has to take care, in applying them, not to violate the "laws, manners, customs and usages" of the native community as these may subsist. It must not allow a trust to be made a means of conferring a gift either inter vivos or by testamentary disposition upon a person not in existence at the moment when the donation is declared. It must not allow it to effect a course of a devolution opposed to the Hindu law of property and succession. Thus, the operation of native laws is preserved as to the estates that may be taken in property and the purposes to which they may be applied, while it gains a flexible adaptation to new circumstances from the English system. In meeting an exigency, or taking cognizance of a form of right not provided for in the shastras, the Court in exercising its juritdiction under s. 41 of the Letters Patent (Bombay), may certainly apply the Hindu law. It must be careful not to overlook it, but, taking the Hindu law as one of its data, it applies "English law" also in the form of equity to all or nearly all the questions that arise. In re KAHANDAS NARRANDAS, 5 B. 154.

(3)—Will, Construction of—Trust.—Technical language is not necessary to create a trust. Words of recommendation, request, entreaty, wish or expectation, addressed to a devisee or legatee, will make him a trustee for the person or persons, in whose favour such expressions are used provided the testator has pointed out, with sufficient clearness and certainty, both the subject-matter and the object or objects of the intended trust. (4)—Handing over property in anticipation of death—Creation of trust (parol). — Where a person in anticipation of his death, handed over his property to his brother and verbally directed him to pay certain specified debts and to apply the surplus for the necessity and support of his family, it was held, that, at any rate so far as the debts were concerned a good trust was created, since a trust might be created either by written instrument or by oral declaration. In India especially, a Court must require a transaction of this kind to be very completely proved before holding that a good trust has been created. The trust was not one in the nature of a testamentary disposition, though it certainly was created by reason of the anticipation of death and could not, after the death of the testator, be recalled or questioned by his representatives. SUDDA SOOK KOOTARY v. RAMCHUNDER, 17 C. 620.

(5)—Beneficiary's right to sue trustee for account—Discretion to trustee—Distinction between trust, condition and fiduciary power.—A will ran:—"I bequeath Rs. 5,000 for the marriage expenses of my daughter S. to be paid when that event happens." Held that the case was one of trust and that the subject-matter of the trust was not the power only to spend out of the fund, but the fund itself. No discretion is given to the trustees under the will to spend what was necessary or legitimate, but they are directed to pay the whole amount. So, if the ceremonial expenses did not exhaust the fund, the trustees were under an obligation to present the balance to S, the beneficiary. S had therefore a right to sue for an account and for the balance. Distinction between trust, condition and fiduciary power explained. GHANDUMAL RAMRAKHIOMAL v. (9)—Co-sharer taking possession of relinquished property a Trustee.—A co-sharer taking possession of on absconder's property under a clause in the administration paper of a village, stating in general terms that absconders from the village can receive back their property on their return, cannot be held to be a trustee for such absconder, unless there is evidence that he accepted the trust. (12)—Suit for possession—Allegation of transfer by way of trust—Plaintiff to make out prima facie case of trust—Defendant's failure to substantiate defence—Plaintiff not entitled to decree by reason of.—This was a suit for possession of lands with mesne profits. Plaintiff's case was that he and A, one of the defendants, being entitled to certain property in equal shares, he made over his share to K, the wife of A to be held by her in trust for him, K having died, her daughter, the appellant, was in possession, and plaintiff applied to her for what he was entitled to, but she refused to give up anything alleging that the plaintiff had sold his share to K who had made a gift of it to her. The defence thus set up was that plaintiff had sold his share to K for Rs. 3,000, and that she and the appellant claiming under her had been in possession for more than twelve years, and that there never was any trust whatever. The lower Court considered it proved that K did not purchase the plaintiff's share, but that the share had been made over to her as a trust and gave judgment for the plaintiff, but on appeal, the High Court held that the lower Court's decision was erroneous. Plaintiff, having wholly failed to prove his case, his suit ought to have been dismissed without any reference to the defence set up. The plaintiff's case was that he gave the property to K in trust. Unless he could establish the trust, he had, on the face of his plaint, no cause of action, and no right to come into Court at all. And unless he made out at least a prima facie trust, he certainly was not entitled to call upon the defendants for their defence or in any way to look to or attempt to rely on the defence set up. He had not only not made out any prima facie case of trust but he had not even alleged that any deed of trust was executed or that any writing took place at the time of the alleged creation of the trust. Proof of the trust was thus limited to the statements of certain witnesses, but the High Court considered their evidence to be perfectly unreliable and not to be such as would justify any Court in finding, as a fact, that a trust was created. (14)—Moveable and immoveable property—Voluntary settlement—Trustee, Possession not delivered to—Charitable trust.—Case where a suit for an account and recovery of the net amount, alleged to have been realised by the defendant under a succession certificate obtained by him to collect the debts due to the estate of a deceased person after the execution by the collateral heirs and daughter of the deceased of a document to the plaintiff assigning to him for specified charitable and religious purposes all the moveable and immoveable property of the deceased, was held to fail. The Court observed that, though it was not prepared to lay down as a general proposition, that, in all transactions pertaining to moveable property, actual transmutation of possession is essential for the complete creation of a trust, yet, in this special case, it was necessary for the purpose of proving a complete divesting of themselves by the defendants of their interest in such property. (15)—Trust, Creation of—No transmutation of possession—Subsequent disposition by donor—Income.—When once a trust is properly created, it cannot be defeated by any subsequent act of the settler although there is no transmutation of possession. All subsequent dispositions of portions of the property to different members of the donor's family must be regarded, not as gifts to them or creations of new trusts in their favour which he has no power to make, but as acts of a trustee and only available in favour of the parties to the extent of the shares to which they may be entitled. But this applies only to dispositions of principal. Payments which have been made to any of the family out of the income of the property for their maintenance or other family expenses, ought not to be disturbed, or the parties made to account for what they have received; for there may be circumstances which would render it inequitable to take an account of the income, apportion it among the different parties and charge any of them with what he or she may have received beyond his or her share of the income SIR JAMSETJI JIJIBHAI v. The ambiguity of the language used on the one subject cannot control the clear and unambiguous words employed with regard to the other. The construction placed on an earlier document could not be used in construing a later document executed by the same person, when the later document did not embody or refer to the earlier document, and when, further, they did not form parts of the same transaction and were not even contemporaneous. to the trustee appointed thereunder to appoint new trustees. Subsequently, a suit was instituted for the administration of the trust. In this suit a preliminary decree was passed and the estate was under the administration of the Court. In the state of things, the original trustee, under the power vested in him under the original deed of trust, appointed a person as trustee without the sanction of the Court. Held, that when a suit has been instituted for the administration of a trust and a decree has been made, that attracts the jurisdiction of the Court and the trustee under the deed of trust cannot, afterwards, exercise the power of nomination or of a new trustee except with the sanction of the Court. Such an appointment, made without the sanction of the Court, cannot be valid. Where by a registered deed a person settled certain immoveable property on certain charitable trusts, and appointed himself as hukdar for life, and provided that after his death, his grandson should succeed him as hukdar, and that such grandson and every successive hukdar should in turn select a successor in like manner, held, that though the provisions as to the succession after the death of the settler's immediate successor may be open to objection, that cannot affect the provisions as to the succession of the settler's immediate successor, that the right to the trusteeship which became vested in him at the date of the deed took effect in possession at the death of the settler, and that the appointment made by the settler in the deed of trust cannot be cancelled by a subsequent deed. The mere collection, by the settlor, of rents of the property conveyed to the trustees, does not, in itself, constitute a setting up of a title adverse to the trustees or amount to an ouster of the trustees. Where the defendant, who was not put into possession by the plaintiff, is found to have paid rent to him, held, that the mere payment of rent is only prima facie evidence of an attornment, and that, notwithstanding the payment, it is open to the defendant to show that the plaintiff's title was defective. (41)—Invalid trust—Donor one of the trustees—Suit by donor for recovery of property from co-trustees, on basis of resulting trust—Plea of adverse possession.—Where a donor creates a trust and transfers the property to several trustees of whom he is himself one, they all become joint owners of the trust property, and they cannot act otherwise than jointly, even though frequently and for many purposes one member of the body, it may be the donor trustee himself, represents the others. And such joint possession excludes that of any one of the joint possessors on his own behalf. In such a case, when the donor pleads that the trust was invalid and created a resulting trust in his favour, and sues to recover the property from the co-trustees, the co-trustees are entitled to set up the plea of adverse possession; and the joint possession of the donor as a trustee along with the other trustees will not enure to his benefit. The following acts were relied on by plaintiffs in support of their claim, viz., that they and their ancestors had been maintaining and conserving the tank at their cost, that they built at their cost a flight of steps, and sluices, and had been cleaning them repairing and strengthening the bunds, enjoying the fruits of the trees on the banks, and that the occupants of the houses on the bunds constructed them with the leave of plaintiffs' ancestors. Held, that whatever might be the nature of the evidence required to establish a proprietary right, the above acts were not sufficient to sustain the plaintiffs' right as trustees, and the presumption of a lost grant could not be made in favour of the plaintiffs. Where, in an action in ejectment, the notice of surrender was prematurely given, and objection as to want of proper notice was taken for the first time in second appeal. Held, that the objection should be deemed to have been waived and could not be sustained. Plaintiff now sued to redeem the kanom. The defendant denied his right to redeem on the ground that he was not the trustee at the date of suit. The lower appellate Court, finding that the plaintiff was not the trustee, dismissed his suit. In second appeal it was contended (1) that the defendant who was the assignee of the original kanomdar was estopped from denying the plaintiff's title to redeem; and (2) that the right of the temple and of its real trustee to the property is extinguished by limitation and that plaintiff has acquired a right thereto by adverse possession. Held, (1) that the defendant would be estopped only from denying the title of the temple to the property, but would not be estopped from denying the plaintiff's right to redeem on the ground that he was not the trustee at the date of suit; (2) that, having all along claimed to hold the property as a trustee, he cannot by such possession acquire a right to the property by (47)—Trust—Trustees—Mortgage of trust property—Sanction of Court.—Where the income of the trust property is quite sufficient for carrying out the purposes of the trust, the Court will not sanction the mortgage of the trust properties, although the object of the mortgage was to raise money to improve the trust properties and thus enhance the income thereof. In the present case, certain houses were devised to trustees upon trust to receive the rents and profits, and after defraying all expenses for taxes and repairs, for re-building of the same when necessary and to pay and appropriate the balance for the performance of certain religious rites and charities. The income of the property was more than was required for the purposes of the trust, and the trustees had a surplus of Rs. 19,000 in their hands. They proposed to spend this surplus in pulling down the buildings and in erecting a larger and more substantial building than the former ones. For this purpose, a sum of Rs. 20,000 was found necessary, over and above the said surplus. They applied to the Court for sanction to raise this amount by mortgaging the property. The Court refused to accord its sanction to the proposed mortgage. A mortgage would be a burden on the property, and although at present it seemed probable that it might be very rapidly paid off, the Court cannot allow the trust-property to be the subject of speculation. one of them, though operative to pass the legal estate so as to vest in it that one alone, could not vest the trusteeship in him alone ; and, therefore, that one cannot maintain a suit on the trust, unless joined by the other heirs. The alienation of charity property by the trustees, standing by itself, is not a breach of trust at all ; for, that which the Court might have done upon its own consideration of what would have been beneficially to the charity, might have been done by the trustees, upon their own authority, in the exercise of their legal powers. A trustee, as between himself and one to whom he has conveyed trust property, is as much concluded by his own completed act as any other vendor. So also, the completed act of former trustee, though in itself a breach of trust, is as conclusive against a successor in the trusteeship where it is the successor who, in a suit against one claiming under and by virtue of such act, is seeking to disaffirm and annul it. (49)—Right of alienees of testator's property from executor before his obtaining probate—Provision in indenture of mortgage for appointment of new trustees by election by debenture holders—Holder of debenture transferred by executor before obtaining probate, right of, to attend meeting and elect trustee.—The Dhurumsey Spinning and Weaving Company executed a mortgage of certain lands in the name of certain trustees for securing money borrowed by the Company on debentures. The indenture of mortgage provided that, in case any trustee should die, or retire, or become incapable to act, the surviving or continuing trustees may appoint a new trustee. In default of such appointment, provision was made for the election of a new trustee by the holders of the Company's debentures at a meeting of them convened for the purpose. At such a meeting subsequently held, the chairman excluded certain debenture-holders to whom the executors of one of the parties had transferred the debentures before they had obtained probate. For the purpose of deciding whether the trustee elected at such meeting had been validly appointed or not, the question had to be decided, whether the mere fact that the executors under the deceased trustee's Will had not, on the day of the meeting for electing the new trustee, obtained probate, had or had not the effect of depriving the transferees of debentures from them of their ordinary right to vote, and it was held that these alienees for valuable consideration had, at the date of the meeting, the ordinary rights of other debenture-holders under the indenture, that they were entitled to vote and ought not to have been excluded. Decree was therefore passed that the new trustee had not been validly appointed under the term of the indenture, that he be therefore restrained from acting as such, and that the surviving trustees do, within a month, proceed in the manner provided by such indenture to call a meeting

A suit was brought by the son more than four years after the deed, for redemption of the property, with an offer of payment to his mother, of the money which might be found due by him. Held, whether such deed was a deed of trust or mortgage, that he was equally entitled to a decree in case he paid to his mother all the expenses which she had incurred on the estate; and that, even assuming the deed was a trust, there was nothing in it to prevent him from revoking it at any time that he pleased, after satisfying the trustee. By that deed, he conveyed the Ramnad Zemindari to the second defendant for the purposes mentioned in the deed. One of the terms of the deed empowered the trustee to pay the debts, etc., in any order he pleased and to pay the allowance to the allowance holders, as and when required Subsequent to the settlement deed, the Rajah continued to contract debts. Meanwhile, the second defendant (i e, the trustee) entered into negotiation with an English firm to raise a large sum of money for clearing off the liabilities. The negotiation turned mainly on the questions of postponement of the claims of the Rajah and of the members of his family, who were entitled to certain allowances under the settlement deed, to the payment of interest on the contemplated English loan. Pending these negotiations, the first defendant instituted a suit for the purpose of setting aside the settlement deed of the 12th July, 1895. The Rajah, when approached, did not acquiesce in the postponement of the allowances in favour of the English firm, until he was paid a sum of four lacs of rupees to discharge his post-settlement debts. Thereupon, after taking competent legal advice, the trustee (who is the second defendant in the present suit), in the exercise of the discretion vested in him by the deed, postponed the allowances in full to the discharge of the creditors, and entered into an agreement with the first defendant whereby some of his unsecured loans to the Rajah were secured by a mortgage of portions of the Zemindari and further loans were taken from him to discharge the Rajah's post-settlement debts. In pursuance of the said agreement, the second defendant executed two mortgages in favour of the first defendant and also paid to him a sum of Rs. 43,000, under these instruments. The agreement and the mortgages purported to have been executed also in compromise of the suit instituted by the first defendant to set aside the settlement deed, dated 12th July, 1895. The plaintiff, as heir of the settlor, filed the present suit to set aside the agreement and the two mortgages executed by the second defendant in favour of the first, and to recover the sum of Rs. 43,000 paid by the second defendant to the first defendant, on the ground that the transactions were not warranted by the terms of the settlement. Held, that the allowances were, under the terms of the settlement-deed to be paid "as and when they shall be required," that there was nothing inconsistent with this in an undertaking that calls upon an income shall rank in a particular order, that there was nothing to require the trustee to keep the discretion open, or to prevent him if circumstances required him to do so, from fixing once for all the order of payment and that, in consequence, it was not necessary for him to have obtained the consent of allowance-holders for postponing payment of the allowances. Held, also, that, under the facts and circumstances of this particular case, the trustee had committed a breach of his trust in entering into the transactions which are impugned in this suit. Held, also, that it is no answer to a breach of trust that the trustee acted under competent legal advise. Held, also, that a transferee having full notice of the trust is not absolved from the liability to lose the estate he had acquired, merely because, in his opinion, the transaction is prudent and beneficial to the cestui qui trust. A person having notice of the trust has also notice that the trustee must act reasonably and prudently. Held, also that the mere fact that a purchaser acted with a view of getting good security for his money and not with a desire to cheat any one, will not suffice to protect him. Held, further, that it does not lie on the plaintiff to prove that this transaction is a breach of trust. If a transaction of this kind is impugned, a transaction which prima facie throws a heavy burden on the trust estate for no apparently commensurate benefit it will lie on the trustee to show that there is a real benefit to the beneficiaries. A settlement made with the object of paying off secured creditors does not necessarily delay the unsecured creditors. Held, also, that the suit need not fail, merely because there is no prayer for the removal of the trustee. (23 M. 239, D.) Except where it is established that the plaintiff can get no relief, unless he seeks to remove the trustee and procure the appointment of another, there is no principle on which he ought to be held disentitled to a decree that the money due to the trust be paid over to the trustee. (10 M. 375, 16 M. 31, D.) Held, also, that, where trust money has, by a breach of trust, come into the hands of a person, the beneficiary can follow it, if he desires so to do. Obiter : It is doubtful whether a trustee has power to compromise, at the expense of the trust estate, a suit in which his own position as trustee was attacked. include worship, praise and adoration of the supreme Deity, and a thank-giving for all his mercies. They contain petitions for benefits both temporal and spiritual for all Zoroastrians —for all holy and virtuous men of all other communities—and they comprise prayers for the well being and long reign of the sovereign, for good Government by him, and for victory to him over all his enemies. The Muktad ceremonies tend most unmistakably towards the advancement of the religion promulgated by the Persian Prophet Zoroaster, and the performance of these ceremonies is an act of the Divine worship in its highest and truest sense. The moneys paid to the priests for the performance of the Muktad ceremonies forms a good portion of their ordinary income. The priests make a higher income during the Farvardigan days than they do during any other period of the year, and the Muktad ceremonies form a sort of endowment which goes a long way to maintain the priestly classes whose exixtence is necessary to the community of Zorostrains. According to the belief prevailing amongst the faithful followers of the Prophet Zoroaster the performance of the Muktad ceremonies confers public benefits—benefits on the Zoroaster community, on the peoples amongst whom they live, and upon the country which they have chosen as their home. The fundamental principle underlying this belief is faith in the efficacy of prayers addressed to the great Creator JAMSHED v. SOONABAI, 10 Bom. L. R. 417=33 B. 122.

S. 34 of the Act is repealed wholly; there is no saving or exception in favour of charitable trusts or of trustees of properties dedicated to charity. The saving clause in s. 1, Indian Trusts Act, 1882, has no applicability to the repealing section that immediately follows; and s. 7 of the Statute of Frauds is wholly repealed by s. 2 of the former Act. S. 7 of the Statute of Frauds was mainly intended to regulate procedure. It never applied to India at any time; even if it did, the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, when it came into force, entirely superseded it. Held, by Davar, J.—S. 539, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, is very limited in its scope and operation. It contemplates the institution of a suit to "obtain a decree" for reliefs that are strictly confined to five heads. The first branch of the suit clearly falls under the provisions of the section, for the plaintiffs have obtained a decree under three of the five provisions of the section, viz., (a) the appointment of new trustees, (b) vesting trust property in the trustees, and (c) settling a scheme. But the reliefs asked for in the second branch of the case—namely, the ascertainment and declaration of what are the trusts, the rectification of the trust deeds, the declaration that the defendants have either wrongly declared the trust in the deeds or wrongly interpreted the trusts therein, do not fall under any of the five heads, mentioned in the section. The words "further or other relief" that follow must necessarily be construed to refer to reliefs ejusdem generis and not to reliefs wholly outside those specifically defined under these five heads. A suit brought not to establish a public right in respect of a public trust, but to remedy a particular infringement of an individual right, is not within s. 539, Civ. Pro. Code, 1882. S. 539 contemplates a suit either in the name of Advocate-General at the instance of relators, or a suit in the name of parties "having an interest in the trust" with the consent of the Advocate-General. The "interest" of the parties here contemplated must be the "interest" that is threatened or infringed. A well-established and ancient usage prevailing amongst a community must override such of the tenets of its religion as are shown to have fallen into desuetude and conflict with ancient usage prevailing in the community. (13B. 302, 22 B. 430, F.) Although the conversion of Juddins is permissible amongst Zoroastrians, such conversions are entirely unknown to Zoroastrian community in India; and far from being customary or usual for it to convert a Juddin the Zoroastrian community of India has never attempted, encouraged, or permitted the conversion of Juddins to Zoroastrianism. Even if an entire alien—a Juddin—is duly admitted into the Zoroastrian religion after satisfying all conditions and undergoing all necessary ceremonies, he or she would not, as a matter of right, be entitled to the use and benefits of the funds and institutions under the defendants' management and control; these were founded and endowed only for the members of the Parsi community; and the Parsi community consists of Parsis who are descended from the original Persian emigrants, and who are born of both Zoroastrian parents and who profess the Zoroastrian religion the Iranies from Persia professing the Zoroastrian religion who came to India either temporarily or permanently, and the children of Parsi fathers by alien mothers who have been duly and properly admitted into the religion. Held, by Beaman, J.—The decision of a suit under s. 589, Civ. Pro. Code, is not only binding on the parties to it, but to all persons affected by it. The expression "such further or other relief" in the section means such further or other relief as, from the nature of the introductory words and the exemplificatory cases, appears to the Court to be appropriate in such a suit, e.g., removing fraudulent trustees, restraining a breach of trust, and so forth. Any extension or limitation of the scope of a trust, so as to exclude those who were intended to be included or to include those who were intended to be excluded, is a breach of trust. The Zoroastrian religion does admit and enjoin conversion. The Indian Zoroastrians, while theoretically adhering to their ancient religion and consistently avowing its principal tenets, including, of course, the merit of conversion as a theological dogma, erected about themselves real caste barriers, and gradually fell under the influence of the caste idea, till, in modern popular language, it has found current expression in the term Parsi, which now seems to have as distinctly a caste meaning and has essentially a caste connotation as that used to denominate any other great Indian caste. In the Zoroastrian community, while the religion and its ritual purity are still the mainspring of the communal life, they are so intimately bound up with the exclusiveness and the purity of the tribe or caste, that they have become practically identical. It is, therefore, fairly accurate to describe the Indian Zoroastrians as Parsis—thereby implying a caste, or communal, or tribal organization. Conversion—in the abstract at any rate, and as a theoretical religious tenet—was perfectly familiar to the Parsi community, not only in the remote past, but in our own time. It was not the intention of the founders of the trusts in question to extend their benefits to any one who was not, in the most rigid caste sense Parsi, that is, born into the community of the Indian Zoroastrians and born of an Indian Zoroastrian father. Where the plaintiffs sued to establish a religious trust upon certain lands in the occupation of defendants (the plaintiffs and defendants being members of a joint Hindu family), and stated that the trust was created by a deed of sale subsequent to another deed by which the property had been partitioned by the joint family, but which latter deed, they alleged, had never been acted on, having been a mere

In the event of N dying issueless (which event happened) the property was to be divided into ten portions, six of which were given to various donees, and the remaining four were to go to charity. The deed contained a revocation clause. Up to his death J was himself one of the trustees and was in physical possession, occupation and enjoyment of all the trust property. There was no formal delivery of possession of the property to the trustees, but on the day of the settlement, J opened in his books an account of the property as trust property. After the execution of the deed, a son C (plaintiff) was born to J, who, acting under the power reserved to himself under the revocation clause, caused another draft agreement to be prepared, according to which the monthly payments payable under the deed were maintained, but the whole property was directed to be held by the trustees upon trust for N and C as members of a joint and undivided Khoja family. The draft agreement was engrossed, but as the copyist made mistakes in the engrossing, the document was not signed by J and another engrossment was ordered, but before it could be got ready, J died. C then filed a suit for ascertaining whether or not the deed of 1886 was a valid instrument and praying that the defective execution of the second deed may be aided by the Court and the provisions of the same be carried out: Held, (1) that, however restricted might have been the gift in form to J, it was in effect a gift absolute to him for life, (2) that the gifts to N, following on the life-estate of J, was valid under Mahomedan law, (3) that the gifts over on N's death without male issue were clearly contingent and as such were not good gifts under Mahomedan Law, (4) that the portion of the deed of settlement which purported to create a wakf in respect of four-tenths of the settled property was bad and void inasmuch as it was a contingent gift in wakf, (5) that the gift was bad for want of contemporaneous delivery of possession, (6) that this was a case in which the Court might act upon those principles which had always guided the Courts of Equity in England and aided defective execution of a power, defective not through any fault on the part of the persons intending to execute it but by reason of an act of God; and that therefore the second deed ought to be effectuated by the Court to the extent of making it binding upon the conscience of the trustees. Where what appears to be a trust-deed turns out to have been entirely void and therefore not to have passed the legal estate, the position of those who took possession, believing themselves to be trustees but not in law real trustees, necessarily assumes the character of possession by trespass and is therefore from its inception in law adverse against all the world. Where, however, the trust-deed in itself is good and valid to the extent of passing the legal estate but the trusts declared are in themselves wholly or partially bad, then there is resultant trust over to the author of the trust; and the possession of the trustees, whatever they may think of it and however they might intend to use it for the purpose of carrying out the bad trust, could not in law be adverse to the cestui que trust, that is to say, the grantor. Where it is the intention that there shall be an ultimate resultant trust in favour of the grantor, it is usual to express that on the face of the deed. A deed so framed as upon its very face to provide for the springing back of the trust fund or a part of it in certain events to the author of the trust, does create what is at once an express or a resultant trust. A resultant, implied or constructive cestui que trust is not entitled to the benefit of s. 10 of the Limitation Act, 1908. Where a trust is express, even though the cestui que trust chooses to put up with the acts of a trustee and to take no steps to recover the trust property for more than 12 years, yet he is not barred when he does so choose to pursue and endeavour to recover it. But where the relations between the trustee and cestui que trust are not express but have arisen by implication of law only, then if the trustee assume an adverse attitude towards his cestui que trust, the cestui que trust must seek his remedy within the period of twelve years. —In general, limitation against a resultant trustee cannot commence to run until the question whether or not the declared trusts are good or bad is decided. In the case where there is a failure of the declared trust and a resultant trust over to the settlor or his heirs, the possession of the trustee is always that of the cestui que trust; on failure of the trust, the trustee holds as trustee for the settlor. Thus, so long as he retains and professes to retain the character of a good and legal trustee, he is holding the legal estate as stake-holder for two claimants the intended beneficiaries of the declared trusts which have failed and the resultant trustee, i.e., the settlor. No length of possession by such a trustee can be adverse to his true cestui que trust as soon as that legal person is discovered and ascertained. Where the ultimate resultant trust which is to spring back to the settlor is consistent with the discharge of the declared trust, then it may by loose use of language be said to be express on the face of the deed, but where the extinction or failure of all the intended trusts is a condition precedent to the resultant trust coming into being, then the latter is clearly a true resultant trust and is not express and never can be express on the face of the deed. So long as a trustee occupies the position of a trustee, as soon as the declared trusts fail and there is a resultant trust in favour of the settlor, the trustee's possession is essentially that of his cestui que trust and can only be changed into adverse possession by a conscious and deliberate act. That is to say, he must repudiate all intention of holding for the resultant cestui que trust and he must assert his intention of continuing to apply the trust fund to uses which the Court has declared or which are known to him to have failed. In that event his possession becomes adverse to his legal cestui que trust and if that person does not take steps within twelve years, he will not be able to avail himself of the provisions of s. 10 of the Limitation Act, 1908. Under Mahomedan Law, a person can devote his property in wakf and yet reserve to himself and his descendants in a very indefinite manner the usufruct of the property. A document which is a declaration of a wakf is not necessarily invalid by reason of the postponement of the wakf to a life enjoyment of the donor. (12 Bom. L.R. 341, Reconsidered.) Under Mahomedan Law, the general rule is that the power of revocation is inherent in the donor of every gift. But when the gifts are to persons of certain particular classes or when the donor has received from the donees anything in exchange for the gift or part of the substance of the gift itself, the gift is irrevocable. According to Mahomedan Law, where a gift is conditioned by a power restricting alienation, the gift is absolute and the condition is void. It is the essence of a Mahomedan gift inter vivos that the donor should divest himself of the actual possession of the thing given and transfer it to the donee; if the donee does not take physical possession of it at the time of making the gift, then, until he does, the gift is revocable. No gift in futuro can be made by a Mahomedan inter vivos. To validate such a

gift, there must be an actual delivery of sesin to the donee there must be a transfer of possession and that transfer of possession must be from the donor to the donee. Under Mahomedan Law, gift made contingent upon the happening of uncertain future events is not valid. While the Mahomedan law insists that a gift to private persons should be free of all pious and religious purposes, it does not necessarily prohibit the making of the gift to wakf which may be contained in a deed which makes gifts at the same time to private persons. Under Mahomedan law, a donor may give his property in wakf, that is to say, appropriate and dedicate the corpus of it to the service of God, while reserving for himself a life interest in the usufruct. But, as in the case of gifts to private individuals, the Mahomedan law never contemplated and will not allow a merely contingent gift in wakf. This necessarily flows from the jural conception of a wakf, which is the immediate appropriation and consecration of specified property to the service of God, and the reservation of the donor's life-interest in that property does not in any way clash with that conception, for the corpus is there and then definitely and finally appropriated to its intended purpose. But it is plainly otherwise, while the gift is conditioned upon the happening of some future uncertain events. There can, in such circumstances, be no appropriation synchronizing with the declaration, because should the future events happen, it is neither the donor's intention then nor after the happening of that event that the property ever should be appropriated to the service of God. Local usage cannot be allowed to permit Khojas to override the Mahomedan law which prohibits any Moslem from disposing of more than one-third of his property by will. Estoppel and res judicata are entirely distinct. Res judicata precludes a man averring the same thing twice over in successive litigations, while estoppel prevents him saying one thing at one time and the opposite at another. money to found a charity in territories outside the jurisdiction of the Court, the Court should hand the money to the trustees named by the testator, leaving it to the Courts of the country in which the charity is to be carried out to settle the scheme in accordance with which the trustees are to deal with the money. Where the trust-deed of a charity executed subsequently to the death of a testator under whose Will the charity was established did not strictly conform to the provisions of the Will, held that the properties to be held in charitable trusts being in Bombay and the trustees thereof also being in Bombay, the High Court at Bombay had jurisdiction to pass a decree in a suit brought for declaring the trusts upon which the trustees held the property comprised in the deed of trust and for rectifying the deed in accordance with such declaration. [R., 20 B. 495.] A suit against a trustee and his assigns for the purpose of following the trust property in their hands and having it applied for the proper purposes of the trust, falls within s. 10 of the Limitation Act, 1877, and is not barred by any length of time. In a suit brought against certain trustees of a charity for the taking of accounts, on the ground of misapplication of trust funds, charges of fraud and dishonesty made against them must be established at the hearing of the case and must not be allowed to be reserved and proved subsequently in the course of taking accounts. Where the trust deed of a charity executed subsequently to the death of a testator under whose Will the charity was established, is not in conformity with the provisions of the Will, the Court will not, if satisfied that the discrepancy has been the result of a bona fide mistake, visit the past consequences of the mistake upon the trustees. A died in February 1863, leaving a Will which directed that the income arising from certain properties belonging to him should be utilised in the conduct of certain charities. His widow, the first defendant, who had obtained letters of administration with the Will annexed, executed a trust-deed on 13-10-1868, purporting to convey thereunder to the trustees, certain properties of the testator for the trusts declared therein. On 17-4-1869, she executed a second trust-deed in respect of some other properties of the testator. The trusts declared in these two deeds were not in accordance with those mentioned in the Will. The present suit was brought on 10-3-1892 at the instance of certain members of the community interested in the trust, demanding an account from the first defendant of the income arising from the property from the testator's death to the execution of the deed of 13-10-1868, and also an account from the trustees under the deed of 17-4-1869. Held that the first defendant, having made over the property to the trustees in 1868, was not liable to render accounts. There being no evidence that she had used any of the income for her own purposes, the presumption was that she had faithfully discharged her duty. The account was barred by art. 120 of the Limitation Act (1877). Held also that, it having been found that the trustees under the deed of 1869 had paid the income received by them to the trustees under the earlier deed of 1868, no account would be decreed against them. [R., 21 B 257, 10 Bom. L.R. 117=32 B. 364] In the above case, the Advocate-General, as plaintiff also, prayed for an account against the legal representatives of one T, who had been trustee under the deed of 1868 from the date on which it was executed up to his death in 1889. In a previous suit which the trustees had instituted, they had received from T's estate the balance which in that suit they had claimed to be due from him to the charity. The trustees had omitted to ask for an account against him in that suit. Held that under s. 43 of the Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, the Advocate-General, as plaintiff in the present suit, could not sue for an account, as he represented the same interests as the trustees. (1)—Executor and trustee, difference between.—The true position, powers and duties of an executor are essentially different from those of a trustee. HARA COOMAR SIRCAR v. DOORGAMONI DASI, 21 C. 195.

(2)—Liability of receiver, executor and trustee, contrasted.—A Receiver occupies a position towards the estate in his hands different from that of an executor or trustee. A Receiver acts through the Court. His acts are virtually the acts of the Court. Executors or trustees, not acting through or under directions of the Court do not and cannot, under ordinary circumstances, create obligations binding on the estate in favour of creditors. MOHARI BIBI v. SHYMA BIBI, 30 C. 937=7 C.W.N. 799.

(3)—Registrar of High Court, Secretary of State, Comptroller-General not trustee in respect of Government pro-note.—Neither the Registrar of a High Court or Sudder Dewani Adawalat, nor the Secretary of State, nor the Comptroller-General, is a trustee on behalf of the owner of Government pro-note deposited with Registrar of Adawalut or High Court for benefit of such owner. RANEE CHANDRA KALLY DEBI v. EDMUND PELLY CHAPMAN, 9 C.W.N. 443=32 C. 799.

(4)—Manager of a joint Hindu family, if trustee.—The manager of a joint Hindu family is not the agent of the members of the family so as to make them liable to be sued as if they were the principals of the manager. The relation of such persons is not that of principal or agent, or of partners; it is much more like that of trustee and cestui que trust. ANNAMALAI v. MURUGASA, 5 Bom. L.R. 494.

(5)—Trustee and cestui que trust—Trustee trading with trust estates—Cestui que trust entitled to profits.—Any profit acquired by a trustee out of investments of the trust funds must be regarded as earned for and belonging to the cestui que trust, for, it would not be tolerated that trustees should gain pecuniary benefit to themselves by speculating with trust funds and thus avail themselves of their fiduciary position to fill their own pockets. subsequently mentioned suit was a married woman, and who executed a power-of-attorney, authorizing O G & Co. to receive payment of the legacy and to execute a settlement of a portion of the same according to articles contained in the power. This settlement was made, and under it a portion of the legacy was assigned to trustees, who did not execute the deed or undertake the trust, and no other trustee was substituted for them. O G & Co. at various times advanced money to J S, and in acknowledgment received promissory notes from her for a portion of such advances; and in a suit by O G & Co. to recover the amount of these advances, it was held that O G & Co., standing in a fiduciary relation to J S, before they could avail themselves of her acts, must show that she did them with a full knowledge of the circumstances of the case and of her own position with regard to it. SMITH v. STEWART, Bourke O.C. 292.

(7)—Trust—Possession given by Revenue Officer—Direction to pay profits to another—Nature of possession given.—Where a Revenue Officer gave possession of certain lands to the defendant with a direction to give to the plaintiff the profits after paying the revenue due to Government, the nature of possession given to the defendant was that of a trustee and not that of a depositary. VITHAL VISHVANATH PRABHU v. RAMACHANDRA SADASHIV KIRKIRE, 7 B.H.C.A.C. 149.

(8)—Insolvent Estates Court, appointment of trustees by—Buying of insolvent's property by trustee for pre-existing debt, whether valid.—When trustees are appointed to realize the assets of an insolvent's estate, to convert them into money and distribute the proceeds rateably among the creditors, a transfer of the insolvent's property to one of the trustees, by himself and his co-trustees in consideration of a pre-existing debt due to him from the insolvent is not valid, as such transaction amounts to constructive fraud as against the creditors. PERTAB SHAH v. FATTEH CHAND, 17 P.R. 1876.

(9)—Appointment of new trustee—Right of stranger.—A total stranger to the trust has no right to ask for the appointment of a new trustee of the trust-deed. BHUJENDRO BHUSAN CHATTERJEE v. TRIGUNANATH MOOKERJEE, 8 C. 761.

(10)—Commission to Trustees—Calculation.—When commission is allowed to trustees annually, it must be calculated on the imcome of the estate and not on the corpus. LLOYD v. WEBB, 24 C. 44. [R., 9 C.W.N. 528=1 C. L.J. 605.]

(11)—Trustee de son tort.—A person, who without being appointed a trustee by the founder of an endowment, takes charge of the endowment and manages it as the endowment property, makes himself a constructive trustee, or in other words, a trustee de son tort. JUGAL KISHORE v. LAKSHMANDAS, 1 Bom. L.R. 118=23 B. 659.

Trustee—continued.

(12)—Trustee, duty of—Trust—Trustee must assume it to be valid until set aside—Trustees cannot set up a title by adverse possession.—A trustee must assume the validity of a trust until it is actually impeached. A trustee cannot set up a title to the trust property by adverse possession. A trustee can have no beneficial estate in the trust property except what he may derive from lapse of time, but his is no adverse possession. ARDESHIR v. BAI SIRINBAI, 1 Bom. L.R. 721.

(13)—Trustee and cestui que trust—Right of trustee to grant remissions of rent to tenant—Trustee in loco-parentis—Duty of trustee to invest money—Failure to invest small sums—Breach of trust—Right of trustee to insist on getting release as condition precedent to delivery of property—Bona fide belief in existence of such right—Effect of such belief on question of costs in suit necessitated by wrongful refusal to deliver—Wrongful refusal to deliver possession to cestui que trust—Right to claim rent.—A trustee is competent to make small remissions of rent to tenants on sufficient grounds. But the Court will not allow the remission of a large sum, where it has been made after the trustee has become a wrong doer by his improperly retaining possession of the property after the cestui qui trust has attained majority. Where the trust property consists of money and cannot be applied immediately or at an early date to the purposes of the trust, the trustee is bound to invest the money for the benefit of the cestui que trust. Where the trustee was in loco parentis towards the cestui que trust under the will of the testator who created the trust and defrayed all the expenses of the cestui que trust, he could not be considered to have committed breach of trust in having failed to invest comparatively small sums of money that were required for and spent in a short time for the benefit of the cestui que trust. A trustee is not justified in insisting on the cestui que trust giving him a lease as a condition precedent to his delivering the trust property to him, and a bona fide belief on the part of the trustee that such is his right is immaterial as affecting the question of costs in a suit necessitated by his wrongful refusal. The obtaining a release is solely for the personal benefit of the trustee and is not an act done in the execution of the trust. Where the trustee improperly retains possession of the property (house) belonging to the cestui que trust, and refuses to deliver the same on insufficient grounds, the latter is entitled to claim rent up to the date of delivery of the property to him. RAJARAM DEVI v. LAKSHMI SANKARA, 13 M.L.J. 206.

(14) — Express trust — Outside trespasser.—If express trusts are created, and some outside trespasser who has no business to interfere does interfere then he becomes trustee de son tort, and as such the Court will make him account as if he were the rightful trustee. (15)—Jurisdiction of Court to remove trustee.—The Court can, on the ground of misconduct, immorality or breach of trust, remove from his office the Mahant of a religious institution as being a trustee who is unfit for his office. BASANT DASS v. GANGA DASS, 2 O.C. 340. [R., 6 O.C. 355.]

(16)—Liability of Hindu trustee—Breach of trust—Small Cause Court—Equitable jurisdiction, extent of Act IX of 1850, ss. 25, 32—Act XXVI of 1864, s. 2.—A Hindu trustee, who, having accepted a trust remains passive and takes no steps to see the trust carried into execution is liable for losses arising from the breach of trust of his co-trustee. [R., 12 B. 573, 21 B. 48.] The Court of Small Causes has an equitable jurisdiction only in the cases specified in s. 32 of Act IX of 1850, as the provisions of s. 2 of Act XXXVI of 1864 do not extend the class of cases over which the Court has jurisdiction, but only enlarge the amount for which it may make a decree. Cases where it has been held the Small Causes Courts cannot enforce trusts, unless the trust, sought to be enforced is one for the payment of a distributive share under an intestacy or a legacy under a will, the value of the claim being not greater than Rs. 1,000. The trustees cannot be sued in the Court of Small Causes by the cestui que trust for the recovery of the specific trust property or the value thereof. BAI JADAV v. TRIBHUVANDAS JAGJIVANDAS, 9 B.H.C. 333. [R., 12 B. 573, 21 B. 48.]

(17)—Suit for removal of trustee—Reference to arbitration by Court — Jurisdiction.—The District Judge has jurisdiction to refer to arbitration a suit for the removal of a trustee. NAMBI AIYANGAR v. NARAYANA, 11 M.L.J. 337.

(18)—Removal of, by beneficiary or co-trustees —Trustees cannot remove a co-trustee without the sanction of Court—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—A trustee who has been removed can sue for declaration of his trusteeship.—An instrument creating a trust, may confer on its beneficiaries the power to remove a trustee appointed under it and appoint a new one in his place; but the power must be exercised reasonably; and the Court will not uphold the removal unless it is satisfied that the power was exercised for the benefit of the trust and not in a capricious manner. Trustees were appointed by a deed of trust, executed by members of a caste, which contained no provision empowering the caste to remove them. One of the trustees was excluded from the management of the trust property by his co-trustees. He filed a suit asking for a declaration of his trusteeship and for an injunction to restrain the defendants from denying to him, or otherwise interfering with, his rights as a trustee: Held, (1) that no beneficiary or trustee has any right to remove a trustee. There is no difference in this respect whether the beneficiary is an individual or a caste; (2) that where the legal character of a person is denied, he is entitled, according to s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, to institute a suit "against any person denying" such character. Because there are other persons than those sued who also are denying the right, it does not follow that he must sue them all; (3) that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration and injunction prayed for. Friction or hostility between trustees and the immediate possessor of trust is not of itself a reason for the removal of the trustees. But where the hostility is grounded on the mode in which the trust has been administered, when it has been caused wholly or partially by substantial overcharges against the trust estate, it is certainly not to be disregarded. CHAPSEY v. JETHABHAI, 9 Bom. L.R. 514.

(19)—Mahant of an asthan and temple, position of—Trustee, power of, to create a trust—Estoppel, essentials of—Trusts Act (Indian), s. 47. —Held, that the Mahant of an asthan and temple dedicated to worship is in the position of a mere trustee and has at the utmost the powers of a manager or guardian of an infant. Held further, that a person has no power to appoint a trustee of property of which he himself is the trustee and therefore a deed creating a trust executed by such a person is void ab initio. Held, also, that there can be no estoppel against plaintiff where the defendant acted with full knowledge of the facts and where there was no misrepresentation on the plaintiff's part. SRI DHAR v. MAHANT DHAGAM DAS, 12 O.C. 236=3 Ind. Cas. 549. (6 O.C. 355, R.)

(20)—Trustee of a temple—Purchase of property in his own name, during tenure of office—Nature of acquisition whether for himself or for temple.—A, B and C were trustees of a temple. A purchased in his own name certain properties charged with the performance of certain charity for the temple. Held, where properties were purchased by a trustee under an assignment deed taken in his sole name, while there were at the time two other trustees, and where there is nothing to show that the assignment was taken by him as a trustee, it is probable that he purchased them for himself. (22)—Trusts—Limitation—Cause of action—Adverse possession.—Plaintiff having made over his property in trust to the defendant who was to look after it and enjoy its profits till plaintiff's return, went abroad for more than 12 years and then returned and demanded restoration of the property. Five years after such demand, he sued to recover possession. Held that the suit was brought within time from the date of the demand, and was therefore not barred by the Statute of Limitation. (24)—Relinquishment—Withdrawal from contest—Effect—Endowed property—Suit against trustees—Limitation—Delay—Nazir's report—Evidence—Act VIII of 1859, s. 180.—Where one of three trustees of an endowment each entitled to a third share of the profits, withdraws from a contest between them, his share can only be said to be relinquished in favour of the remaining partners, and to be merged in the general account. No limitation applies in the case of trustees holding endowed property in trust and under accountability; but no consideration could be shown in such a case to claims so stale and antiquated that difficulty arises in finding any reliable evidence whereby to decide on their validity and extent. The report of a Nazir deputed to inquire into the condition of the property in dispute under s. 180, Act VIII of 1859, is not inadmissible merely because he is not an Ameen appointed under Act XII of 1856. BUZL RUHIM v. MOONSHEE LUTAFUT HOSSEIN, W.R. 1864, 171.

(25)—Trustee and cestui que trust—Suit to set aside alienations by trustee—Bona fide purchaser—Limitation—Trustee having power to convey—Purchase for consideration without notice of trust.—A suit by a cestui que trust to set aside, as fraudulent, certain alienations made by the trustee, is not barred by limitation merely on the ground that more than twelve years have, at the commencement of the suit, elapsed since the execution of the deeds of alienation. If the alienees, at the time of taking their respective interests, were cognizant of a subsisting trust affecting the property, or if reasonable enquiry would have made them so, then they would take the property subject to the trust notwithstanding they paid full value for it, and would in all respects stand in the shoes of the original trustee. They would not be bona fide purchaser from trustees entitled to the benefit of the Limitation Act, but actual trustees within the scope of the clauses of the Act which affect such persons. The Court can, on the ground of misconduct, immorality or breach of trust, remove from his office the Mahant of a religious institution as being a trustee who is unfit for his office. BASANT DASS v. The society brought a suit to enforce the mortgage. The suit was dismissed on appeal on the ground that under s. 5 of the Trusts Act a trust of immoveable property can only be created by a document in writing and registered in accordance with law. The donor when examined in the case supported the gift. Held, that the provisions of s. 5 of the Trusts Act were not applicable to the case for s.1 expressly exempts public or private religious or charitable endowments from the operation of the Act. Held also, that the gift was not void for uncertainty. Held, further, that when in such cases the title or ownership of the donee is established and the donor supports the gift the debtor has no locus standi to urge that the gift was incomplete. death of the preceding Mahant, came into possession of the Sangat, a share in Kamal Sarae, and the whole of Karwar Kola and Chak Kharak Sen. He subsequently purchased shares in Kamal Sarae. In 1891 he executed a deed in which he declared that these properties and the shares in Kamal Sarae purchased by him were trust property. In 1892 he sold all the shares in Kamal Sarae and also lands in Kharak Sen. Held that the facts that the Sangat was a public place of worship and an ancient religious institution and that B succeeded to it by virtue of his office as Mahant established that the Sangat was trust property. Held also, that there was a strong presumption that Karwar Kolah was trust property arising from the facts that it was granted to a Mahant of the Sangat, and had passed from Mahant to Mahant for 150 years or so, that such presumption and B's admission was sufficient evidence that the village was trust property ; that the facts that Karwar Kolah was trust property and that B succeeded to the Chak and the share in Kamal Sarae by virtue of his office as Mahant, raised the presumptions that these properties were also trust properties ; that the fact that B had no private property raised the presumption that the shares in Kamal Sarae which he purchased were purchased out of money which came into his hands as Mahant ; and that these presumptions and the admissions of B were sufficient proof that the chak and all the shares in Kamal Sarae were trust property. Held also, that the position of B was also calculated to put the transferees upon an inquiry as to his authority to transfer, and they were therefore bound to make such inquiry they were guilty of gross negligence in not inquiring whether B held the transferred properties as the Mahant of the Sangat or as his private properties, and that, as, had they made such inquiry they would have discovered that he held them as Mahant and therefore as trust property, they did not purchase in good faith without notice of the trust. The Court of Small causes gave him a decree for recovery as a bailment. Held, that the sister had become the guardian of the child and the child's property, and the brother had ceased to be the guardian of the person of the child and also of the child's property; and that he had apparently therefore no status to sue, but that, whether

The term "gift" as used in the section cannot be interpreted so as to include trust. The discharge of a dower debt due from the settler to his wife and the prevention of future disputes and litigation between the members of the settler's family are not in any sense unlawful within the meaning of s. 4 of the Trusts Act. Held further, that physical delivery of the property in addition to the execution of a registered instrument of transfer is not necessary to effect a valid trust under s. 6 of the Trusts Act. Held also, that, in construing family settlements, Courts are to ascertain the real meaning of the parties to the transaction; that, when that meaning has been ascertained, if it appears that the whole plan cannot be carried out but that a part of it can, effect is to be given to that part. The rules established in English Courts for construing English documents are not, as such, applicable to transactions between natives of this country. (12 C. 662, 6 A. 560, R.) Held also, that, in the case of Shias, there appears to be no fixed legal minimum for dower, though in the case of Sunnis there is some authority saying that the minimum amount is 10 dirams. The share was redeemed and P signed the transfer form in the minor's favour on the 1st of December 1902. The Bank refused to accept it for registration on account of the incompetence of the transferees. To get over this difficulty N directed that the share should be transferred to the names of her two brothers as trustees for the minors. The brother's names were accordingly substituted as transferees and the transfer was lodged for registration on the 15th December 1902. It was duly registered in the names of the brothers. Meanwhile, N had died on the 14th December 1902. Both N and P resided at Mangrol outside British India. It was contended that there was an invalid trust as well as an imperfect gift of the share: Held, that both the trust and gift were valid, for the share had passed out of N's control before her death, and the legal holder, P, having notice and having signed a transfer on the 1st December in favour of the minors, could only convey for their benefit, which she subsequently did to the trustees desired by N. Held (1) that N had an equitable interest in the share although the legal holder was P who was the registered proprietor; and that, the mortgage having been discharged, P held the legal title as trustee for N. (2) That, as the certificate as well as the transfer was then under the control of N's brother to whom N had communicated her desire to benefit the minors, she had done all she could to divest herself of her equitable interest in favour of her nephews. (3) That, s. 5 of the Indian Trusts Act applied to N's brother who set up a trust by N in a British Indian Court, although both N and P resided out of British India, when N had declared her wishes regarding the share. (4) That, though there was no written and signed declaration of trust by N, the property was already vested in a trustee, viz., P, who could be compelled, if necessary, to perform the trust. The entry was made as of the 30th November 1890. In the annual balance sheets (sarvaya), in the samadaskat book and in the vyajvahi (interest account-book) the amount was shown as belonging to H, and interest on it was calculated from year to year at varying rates. When H went on pilgrimage in November 1895, she withdrew some money from her account. H died on the 2nd March 1901. On the 29th July 1901, D, on the occasion of his going on pilgrimage, wrote a letter to his four daughters by H, in which he stated that the money was given by him to H by way of gift, that it was placed to her credit in the books and that they had equal right to take the money but it was to be divided after his death. In 1903 the sum of Rs. 20,000 with interest amounted to Rs.31,740. On the 7th February 1903, D debited Rs. 15,000 to H's account and credited the sum to three sons of one of the daughters M; and on the 22nd he did the same thing in respect of the remaining balance. In the will which D made on the 23rd February 1903, he stated that the amount was his own and never belonged to his wife. After D's death, the three remaining daughters of H, sued to recover their share of the money: Held, by Chandavarkar, J., decreeing the claim, that D intended a trust in favour of H, and that that trust was validly created. Held, by Heaton J., that no trust was created; that D intended to give his wife the rights of a depositor and that the positions of depositor and depositee were established; and that D conferred on H a right to the money, though he did not actually give the money. Per Chandavarkar, J.—Reading ss. 5 and 6 of the Indian Trusts Act by the light of the relevant provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, s. 6 of the former Act must be construed as meaning that, though as a rule transfer is one of the conditions necessary for a valid trust, whether in the case of moveable or immoveable property, no transfer is required where the trust is declared by will or the author of the trust himself to be the trustee; and that one of the modes of transfer is a non-testamentary instrument in writing which is registered. The will, however, contained a proviso that the testator had no doubt that the executor would carry out his wishes. After the testator's death, a letter signed by him was discovered, addressed to P and dated April 28, 1895, in which he requested his executor to sell some of his properties and Bank shares and remit the proceeds to his London Bankers for being transmitted to his brother R. The testator's next-of-kin, on the strength of that letter, brought this suit for administration of the testator's estate, against the heirs and legal representatives of P. Held, per White, C.J.—(1) that the letter of April 28, 1895, was inadmissible for the purpose of establishing a trust in favour of the testator's brother R. (31 M. 187, F.) (2) That the letter was not admissible for the purpose of establishing even a resulting trust in favour of the testator's next-of-kin; (3) that the expression in the will, that the testator had no doubt that the executor would carry out his wishes, was not inconsistent with the testator's intention to pass the beneficial interest to legatee; (4) that no question of the executor having held the properties benami for the testator's heirs arose and could be considered. With reference to secret trusts under a will, the Law of India is the same as that of England, and extrinsic evidence to show a specific trust is inadmissible, unless the legatee under the will has assented to the trust or led the testator to believe that he has assented to it. "Attendant circumstances" in s. 81 of the Indian Trusts Act means "circumstances in existence at the date of execution of the will, and means the same as surrounding circumstances." The letter of the testator was inadmissible as evidence of an "attendant circumstance," to show that the testator did not intend to dispose of the beneficial interest, and when the "attendant circumstance," as disclosed by the testator, showed an intention to give the property to R, it also showed that the next-of-kin qua next-of-kin should not get it. Per Sankaran Nair, J.—(1) The testator's letter does not create a trust under s. 5 of the Trusts Act, and it cannot be treated as a will as it is unattested, nor has it any effect as a non-testamentary instrument for want of registration, but it may be looked at for the purpose of determining whether P was only a benamidar or trustee for R; (2) that the letter was "an attendant circumstance" within the meaning of s. 81, Trusts Act, that it was intended to accompany or follow the will, and therefore could be taken into consideration to discover the intentions of the testator; (3) that the combined effect of the will and the testator's letter was to pass the beneficial interest to R and to make P only a trustee for him.—The words "the disposal of the beneficial interest therein" occurring in s. 81, Trusts Act, have reference to the transfer or bequest referred to in the earlier part of the section, and if it is legally proved that the transferor or testator did not intend by such transfer or bequest to part with the beneficial interest, the transferee or legatee is a trustee for the transferor or his legal representative and cannot claim the property under such transfer or bequest. The doctrine of English law that the appointment of executors is a gift to them of the personal estate is not applicable to India. In the case of Hindus, an executor is only the manager of the property, and the Trusts Act was intended to get rid of conceptions of double ownership, as a "legal" and an "equitable" estate. The deed further provided that, on the death of the survivor of the grand-daughters, the trustees were to hold the property in trust for the sons of the grand daughters, who attain the age of eighteen and the daughters of the grand-daughters, who attain that age or marry, such that each child of the grand-daughter was to take his or her share of the corpus on coming of age if a male or, if a female, on being married. On the question whether such gift to the children of the grand-daughters was good under Hindu Law or bad for remoteness or on any other ground, it was held that, since the trust in favour of the children of a grand-child was an event which was to happen upon the death of the grand-child or of the widow whichever should last happen, and the parties, to whom an estate for life was conveyed, were in being at the date of the settlement, the gift in remainder to the children of the grand-daughters was good and valid under Hindu Law, and did not contravene the rule against perpetuities, s. 2 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act providing that nothing in the second chapter of that Act shall be deemed to affect any rule of Hindu Law. On behalf of the appellant, it was further argued that something was required over and above the execution of the conveyance and its registration, something in the nature of physical delivery of possession in order to effect a valid transfer and it was held, there is nothing in s. 6 of the Trust Act to suggest that trust property cannot be effectively transferred by a registered instrument. Under s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, transfer, by way of gift, of immoveable property can be effected by a registered instrument and, there being no reason for holding that what is sufficient in the case of a gift of land is not sufficient in the case of a conveyance of land in trust, the deed in question operates as a valid declaration of trust and an effective transfer of the property. (24)—Ss. 15, 20, 23—Trust—Amount payable to minor—Responsibility of trustees—Investment in unauthorised securities—Liability for damages—Interest.—Where trust money is payable to a minor (testator's son), the money could not be applied for the purposes of the trust at an early date, as the trustees could not pay the money until the attainment of his majority. The trustees could not discharge themselves by payment to the minor's natural guardian who was his mother. The trustees, who took the place of the guardian so far as the protection of this money was concerned, could not lawfully make payment either to the infant or to the guardian. Even with regard to money which is capable of being applied at an early date, e.g., money payable to the testator's daughter for jewels, if the trustees take the responsibility of keeping the money in investment for a long time, they are bound to make the investment in accordance with their obligations as trustees. The specific provisions contained in the other sections of the Indian Trusts Act are as obligatory as the general provisions in s. 15. The measure of prudence required of a trustee by s. 15 must be regulated by any specific provisions applicable to special matters found in the other sections of the Act. The (trustees) defendants were bound to comply with the provisions of s. 20, and having failed to do so, they must be held to have committed a breach of trust, although there can be no reason to doubt that they acted honestly and with the prudence which an ordinary man would exercise in the conduct of his own affairs, and that they were influenced merely by a desire to secure for the minor a higher rate of interest than could have been obtained by resorting to some of the other modes of investment sanctioned by s. 20. It cannot be held that provisions in s. 15 exempting trustees from responsibility where they have acted with prudence is intended to exonerate them, where, by not acting with prudence, they have committed a breach of trust. The meaning of 2nd clause of the section is that where a trustee has acted with prudence, he should not be held to be guilty of breach of trust. But this rule must be applied in conjunction with the other sections which regulate the measure of prudence required in particular cases. S. 23 lays down in broad terms that, "where the trustee commits a breach of trust, he is liable to make good the loss which the trust property or the beneficiary has thereby sustained." This statement is followed by certain exceptions to the rule. It is impossible to hold that s. 23 can be controlled by interpreting s. 15 in such a manner as to exempt a trustee from liability for damages on the ground that he has acted with ordinary prudence. Powers have been conferred on English Courts by successive English Statutes of relieving honest trustees from their liability for breach of trust. But the Indian Courts have not been given the power to protect trustees in any case, when a clear breach of trust has been committed. The ordinary principle must therefore apply that, when an injury has been caused to the beneficiary by an act done by the trustee in violation of his duty, he is entitled to claim from him the damages he has sustained by his breach of trust. Where the trustee invests money in an unauthorized security, this must apparently be treated as tantamount to failure to invest, for a trustee cannot be taken to have fulfilled his duty to invest, unless he does so in the manner required by law. Besides it may be doubted whether the rule disentitling the beneficiary to interest except in the cases enumerated could be applied where the trust money has been altogether lost. The Court should have power in such cases to award interest as damages. Illustration (e) to s. 23 shows that where a trustee has failed to invest trust-money in the manner directed by the instrument of trust he is liable for interest, although he may have made some other investment. The same principle should be applicable where the failure is in making an investment in accordance with the provisions of s. 20, Illustration (f) to s. 23 justifies the same conclusion. Defendants as trustees under the will of A invested the trust money with the late Messrs. Arbuthnot & Co. In consequence of the failure of that firm, the investment was lost and the present suit was to recover from those trustees the amount lost with interest. Held the trustees were liable, though they acted bona fide, inasmuch as the investment was in an unauthorised security not mentioned in s. 20 of the Trusts Act, NEELAM TIRUPATHIRAYUDU NAIDU GARU v. The law requires from trustees an active and vigilant prudence, and a trustee is called upon, even if a breach of trust is only threatened, to prevent it by obtaining an injunction. Hence, where a trustee stands by for four years while the trust funds are retained by his co-trustees and though he has abundant reasons to put him upon inquiry, makes nothing that can be called an inquiry but passively acquiesces in the disappearance of the funds, he is liable to the beneficiary for the default of his co-trustees. (29)—S. 30—Liability of Executor—Advisory duty no valid defence—Care to be taken in appointing agent—Want of diligence—Liability for mismanagement of co-executor—Breach of duty.—A testator left a will appointing five persons including defendant No. 1 his widow, and defendant No. 2, as executors for the management of his estate and directed that a proper boy should be adopted and that the property should be managed by the executors according to the votes of the majority including his widow, giving powers to invest the money due to the estate on some business and directing that it should be handed over to his adopted son as soon as he attained majority. The plaintiff, the adopted son, on attaining majority, sued to recover the amount that might be due to him on taking account of the debts and moveable property of his deceased father, received and recovered by the executors, and to make good the loss that he might have incurred owing to their negligence, fraud, want of proper care and mismanagement. First defendant, the widow, contended that, though she was mentioned in the will as an executor, the estate was managed by the other four executors, and that she was, therefore, not liable for any mismanagement. 2nd defendant contended that his duties were purely advisory, that he was but one of many, that the votes of the majority governed, that the business had been carried on by an agent appointed for the purpose and that he was, therefore not liable. It was found upon evidence that the agent was, to the knowledge of the 2nd defendant, not a man of probity and that there was no proper supervision in his work. Held, that the defendants were liable to render accounts to the plaintiff and must make good the loss sustained, if any, owing to their negligence, want of proper care and mismanagement. When those entrusted with a fund for the benefit of another could not produce it at the appointed time, prima facie they were liable for the loss. An executor could not be relieved of his liability on the ground that his duties were merely advisory, that he was one of the many, that he was not specially entrusted with the management of the trust-property and that the management was carried under the votes of the majority. One, who undertook a duty, was bound to know what his duty required. Where there was want of proper care and diligence on the part of a trustee not only in the appointment of an agent to carry on the trust business, but also in the supervision of the agent, there was a clear breach of duty and that the trustee was liable for breach of trust. S. 30 of the Act was inapplicable to such a case. LAKHMI CHAND NEMCHAND v. JAI KUVARBAI, 29 B. 170=6 Bom. L.R. 907.

It was held that the question was one of detail with which the Court could not effectively deal, without having a superintending power, and that the case was not one in which the Court could give directions under this section. On the 29th May, 1907, the gentlemen holding the said offices at the time, filed an application under the Trust Act for permission to sell the property and invest the sale proceeds thereof in some recognized securities; the interest accruing therefrom being appropriated for the purpose specified in the trust. Held that the application could not be made, as s. 1 of the Act excluded public charitable trusts from the scope of the Act. Held, also, that, as the officers mentioned in the trust deed were not corporations sole, and as only legally recognized persons could be appointed trustees, the effect of appointing them as trustees was to be restricted to those only who were holding the offices at the time the deed came into operation. The present incumbents of those offices could at best be considered as constructive trustees, to which case s. 34 was inapplicable. (38)—Ss. 63, 64—Trustee—Acquisition of title adverse to the trust—Prior judgment not inter partes, admissibility in evidence of.—The main question in this case was whether or not the share in certain villages sued for by the plaintiff was subject to a trust for religious and charitable purposes under a will as set up by the defendant who pleaded that the estate had been jointly held, by him and the person from whom the plaintiff claimed by inheritance, only for the trust purposes specified in a will by the original owner. Plaintiff stated that the will had been revoked and denied the trust set up. The High Court decreed the claim and the Judicial Committee did the same, on the ground that the will and the trust alleged were not established by the evidence. With reference to the ground set forth by the High Court, viz., that, assuming that there was a will and it was not revoked, it was yet competent to the trustees to appropriate the trust property to their own private uses and that they did so and held adversely to the trust title and themselves acquired a title, the Judicial Committee remarked that the High Court was wrong on the point, since, under the law contained in ss. 63, 64, of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, if there was a trust, the trustees could acquire no title adversely to the trust by having possession of the property and claiming to appropriate it to their own use. In this case certain prior judgments, which were not inter partes, but had been passed between parties interested in the trust in question, and contained a reference to the revocation of the will creating the trust, were taken to be admissible in evidence, though such judgments could neither afford any conclusive evidence against the present parties, nor bind them operating as res judicata under s. 13 of the Civ. Defendant alleged that, in pursuance of a conspiracy between him and the plaintiff to defeat the title of a third person in possession of the land under a prior oral sale to him followed by an unregistered instrument by its original owner, plaintiff got the original owner's son to execute a registered conveyance of the land in favour of the 1st defendant, who in his turn was made to convey it to plaintiff under the registered sale-deed in question. Defendant, therefore, pleaded that plaintiff as one concerned in the fraud of which, the execution of the present conveyance to him formed part, was not entitled to seek the relief claimed as for breach by vendor of warranty of title. Held, plaintiff was not entitled to recover, as the transaction of the sale he relied on was part of a fraud in which he himself was concerned. Further, on the contention raised for the plaintiff that he was not debarred from seeking relief since the unlawful compact was not fully carried out and the third person conspired against was not in fact defrauded and the illegal purpose in this case was "not carried into execution" within s. 84 of the Act, held, the unlawful agreement need not be fully carried out to warrant the application of the rule as to persons in pari delicto. In a suit by A on foot of the bond for sale of the hypothecated property, held that A must be deemed to hold his purchase for the benefit of the trust estate, and that he could charge the trust with the amount he actually paid for the bond, it being reasonably clear under the circumstances that his interests as purchaser of the bond were or might be adverse to the interests of the trust estate as owner of the equity of redemption in some of the properties. Thus in both cases one essential condition of liability is "an advantage gained." In the first, there must also be unconscientious conduct. In the second, that is not necessary if there were a possibility of conflict between interest and duty. Under the section there is no saving clause for cases of good faith. The section, therefore, taken by itself does not validate a purchase by an executor of the trust property either on the ground of bona fide assent by his co-executor or of good faith in the executor himself who under the section could not retain an advantage even though unconsciously obtained in the transaction where his interest and duty were in conflict. A surviving partner being a person who holds the property by virtue of a contract may buy the property in trade of his deceased co-partner under proviso (b) to s. 95 of the Trusts Act, but inasmuch as his interests in the transaction may conflict with his duty he is even then precluded by s. 88 from retaining for himself any advantage he may have acquired by the bargain. That is, he must give full value or what he could reasonably believe to be full value. There is no exception in favour of a co-executor or surviving partner who transgresses those limits with the assent of a bona fide executor. The only saving clause which protects the executor or surviving partner transgressing those limits from the liabilities attaching to an ordinary trustee is that contained in s. 96. S. 96 of the Trusts Act applies to all the various classes of so-called constructive trustees described in ch. IX and differentiates them from trustees properly so-called by declaring that nothing in the chapter relating to them shall impair the rights of transferees in good faith for consideration. And that is the only provision that saves an executor buying his testator's assets from liability for advantage gained unwittingly in the bargain, and a surviving partner purchasing under proviso (b) of s. 95 is yet subject to the latter part of s. 88 and could only retain an advantage thereby gained, on proof of good faith as well as of consideration. The good faith must be good faith in the transferee. The good faith of a co-executor will not avail him. It appears from ill. (f) to s. 88 of the Trusts Act, that the section demands from a surviving partner the same uberrima fides as regards the interests of a deceased partner as was due before death had dissolved the partnership, so far as the profits arising from the capital of the deceased are concerned. For these he must account to the legal representative, though no doubt when he has done so there is nothing there to prevent him from receiving the assets in purchase or loan from such representative. But so long as he is under that liability to account, he is evidently within the meaning of the phrase which classes him with "other person bound in a fiduciary character to protect the interests of another." Under the Indian Trusts Act, surviving partners are not classed with trustees; but they are subject to obligations in the nature of a trust and classed with persons bound in a fiduciary character to protect the interests of others, and the same duties, liabilities and disabilities, so far as may be, attach to them as to trustees subject to the provisos in s. 95 and the saving provisions of s. 96 of the Act. S. 111 of the Indian Evidence Act applies to the question of good faith arising under s. 96 of Indian Trusts Act. In the absence of agreement, the good will of a business does not survive. after expense—Nature of the right of others to a share in the advantage—Waiver or abandonment of right, what constitutes—Negligence in the enforcement of the claim, effect of—Distinction between laches and acquiescence—Election.—S. 90, Trusts Act, does not create an absolute right, but a right subject to a condition, the condition being that the party seeking to benefit by its provisions must repay his due share of the expenses properly incurred in the acquisition of the advantage. The burden of these expenses may, in his estimation, prove to be such as to make it not worth his while to enforce his right. There is thus clearly an election to make, a condition to fulfil. If when called upon to make the election and to comply with the conditions, he holds back and shrinks from accepting the burden attaching to the right, he cannot afterwards be permitted to change his mind, especially when he so conducts himself as to induce a reasonable belief that the right is foregone, and his adversary, acting upon that belief, enters into a speculative transaction, which may end in placing him in a position of disadvantage. The right recognised by this section is not an absolutely vested right or a right which can be enforced by an unconditional decree for joint possession, without any regard being paid to the nature of the property, or the defendant's right in it, or the equities arising in the case from the conduct of the parties. (2 M.H.C. 270, D.) Where there is an element of uncertainty in a property, the Court requires a person to be active in the prosecution of his rights, and not to sleep over them. Distinction between laches and acquiescence explained. A and B were the co-owners of a certain Mahal. B accepted a surrender of an occupancy holding, but since the surrender was also followed by an application by the heirs of the tenant under s. 36 of the Tenancy Act to be placed in possession of the surrendered holding, B had to undergo certain expenses for securing the holding. While these proceedings, which were of a protracted character, were pending, B gave A a notice giving him the option to share in the benefit of the surrender on payment of his quota of all charges incurred in connection with it. But to this notice there was no response. The litigation, at last, ended in favour of B, and an order for possession of the holding was made in his favour by the revenue authorities. A then instituted the present suit for joint possession of the holding, offering to pay his share of the expenses properly incurred by B. Held, the case is not merely one of neglecting to enforce a claim for the period during which the law permits him to delay without losing his right, but of so conducting oneself as to induce the belief that it has been waived or abandoned, and that it would not be equitable in the circumstances to permit A now to enforce his right under s. 90 of the Trusts Act. The consideration for the payment is certifying payment as the judgment is to discharge the decree debt, and the decree-holder is therefore bound to take the necessary steps to give a proper discharge; otherwise the decree still remains capable of execution by the decree-holder or any other attaching decree-holder. The payment therefore must be treated as having been made without consideration, and the judgment-debtor is entitled to get back the money so paid. (2)—Bond—Circumstances under which relief may be granted by the Court.—A person of the age of some twenty-eight years, the son of a wealthy father, but of profligate habits and greatly in need of money, his father having refused to supply him, executed a bond to secure a sum of Rs. 500 with interest which amounted to Rs. 37 8-0 per centum per annum with six monthly rests. The bond further contained a stipulation that the borrower should not be empowered to repay the money within three years, and if he did pay within three years, he should nevertheless be obliged to pay three year's interest at the rate mentioned. Held, though it could not be said that the execution of this bond was procured by means of undue influence, or that the rate of interest was penal, nevertheless, the bargain was an unconscionable bargain, against which the Court might properly give relief. The High Court affirmed the decree of the lower appellate Court, which gave the plaintiff the principal sum, with simple interest at the rate of 24 per centum per annum. BALAKISHAN DAS v. Unconscionable rate of Interest.

Loan from village money-lender to zemindar—Bond with unconscionable and usurious rate of interest—Obligee entitled to amount reasonably awardable.—The parties to the bond sued on in this case were a village money-lender and the zemindar. They had stood in the relation of creditor and debtor for a considerable period before the execution of the bond. The sum claimed under the bond was Rs. 700. The defendant pleaded that the amount claimed consisted for the most part of interest at an usurious rate and he asked for an examination of the account upon which the bond was based.

Unconscionable Rate of Interest—concluded.

The first Court, on going into the account, found that the amount claimed by the plaintiff consisted of only Rs. 145 as principal while the remaining Rs. 555 was for interest, and accordingly gave him a decree for Rs. 145 principal, and Rs. 197-1-3 interest or a total of Rs. 342-1-3. On the facts, the bond was found to be extortionate and unconscionable and the Chief Court was of opinion that, in the absence of rebutting proof from the plaintiff, the bond could be taken to have been executed under undue influence, and the Courts were therefore justified under s. 19 of the Contract Act in treating at the defendant's instance, the bond as void, and in decreeing to the plaintiff only the principal with interest at a reasonable rate. In order to maintain such a suit in the Civil Court, it is not necessary that the Revenue Court should definitely hold the tenant to possess under proprietary rights. It is enough that the decision should be adverse to the title of the landlord. Held, further, that, in order to establish under-proprietary rights under s. 11 of the Oudh Sub-Settlement Act, it must be shown that the nankar was granted in consideration of having founded a purwa, and even then the under-proprietary rights could be granted only in respect of such nankar. The onus of proving that a kabuliyat was unfairly obtained lies on the person who alleges it. Where a kabuliyat was executed by several persons, it cannot be set aside as a whole, when all the executants did not question it. Per Rivers, J.—It is incumbent on a party, be he plaintiff defendant who seeks to avoid a contract on the ground of fraud or undue influence, to give in his pleadings full particulars of the circumstances on which he relies as the basis of his plea. The lady gave him a large sum. It was only then that he went to Madras. On his services being dispensed with, he sued the lady to recover certain amounts alleged to have been due to him. The defendant pleaded the amount presented by her by way of set-off on the ground that the gift was not voluntary and was invalid.—Held that even if the plaintiff's conduct did not amount to coercion, he had made use of "undue influence" within the meaning of s. 16 of the Contract Act, in that he had made use of the fiduciary relation existing between himself and the defendant to obtain an advantage over her which, but for such confidential relation, he could not have obtained. The principles are always the same, though the circumstances differ. The questions to be considered in a case of gift are—(1) was the transaction a thing which a right-minded person might be expected to do, (2) was it an improvident act, (3) was it a matter requiring a legal adviser, (4) whether the intention to make the gift originated with the donor. MAHOMED BUKSH KHAN v. HOSSEIN BIBEE, 15 C. 684=15 I.A, 81, P.C. =5 Sar. 175. [Appl., 14 A. 8=11 A.W.N. 21.]

(12)—Custom—Alienation — Mortgage and sale of ancestral land by a male proprietor—Suit for its possession on his death by his descendants —Necessity—Equity—Alienee, a Zaildar and Lambardar—Undue influence—Unconscionable transaction—Interference by Courts justifiable—Sale rejected in toto.—Held, that, where the alienee is an influential person, like a Zaildar or Lumbardar in the locality, where the alienated property is situate, and the alienor is a simple-minded Zemindar, and the terms of the contract are, on the very face of them, so harsh and onerous that no person even of ordinary intellect would have accepted them, the presumption is, that the alienor was completely under the thumb of the alienee and was obliged to agree to any conditions imposed at the time of making the bargain, and that the whole transaction is unconscionable and unenforceable by law. In such a case the Courts should interfere and re-arrange the terms according to the principle of justice, equity, and good conscience. On the above principles, in the present case, a charge on landed property, apparently for Rs. 1,174, was reduced to Rs. 284 exclusive of interest on the reduced amount, and a sale-deed of the same property for Rs. 7,880 was entirely ignored. The plaintiff's suit brought against the defendants as trespassers holding under an invalid mortgage was treated as one for redemption. MIAN AMAR SINGH v. TULSI RAM, 123 P.W.R. 1909.

(13)—Undue influence.—Plaintiffs in this suit sued to set aside an ikrarnamah executed by them in favour of defendants, who were their (plaintiffs') near relatives. Under this document, the plaintiffs parted with one-half of the property to which they succeeded by right of inheritance. It was found that one of the plaintiffs had just attained his majority, while the remaining two were minors, when the document was executed, that they executed the document without any consideration, and that they were not informed of their rights. It was found, also, that the document was executed under undue influence and pressure and that the executants were without professional or other advice. Under the circumstances, the Judicial Committee confirmed the decree of the High Court, which set aside the deed. PREM NARAIN SINGH v. PARASRAM SINGH; PREM NARAIN SINGH v. (1)—Zemindars and Poligars—Proprietary rights in land—Reg. XXV of 1802.—Zemindars and Poligars, and others in a like position, and occupying tenants, possessed different proprietary rights in land, by recognition of the Government, before the passing of Reg. XXV of 1802. By it the Government declared, with the force of law, their acknowledgment and confirmation of such rights, as they were then enjoyed, and, in order to quiet all uncertainty and disquietude respecting them, and to establish general certainty of tenure in the holders of the same, provided for the permanent assessment of all lands liable to pay revenue to Government; and for the issuing thereupon of express hereditary grants to every Zemindar and other intermediate proprietor, and written engagements between them and their tenants; and therefore, the Regulation does not operate to exclude or disfavour the maintenance of a claim against the Government to a hereditary or other estate in lands, which has not been secured the benefits of a settled title under the Regulation, because, for political reasons, the Government has thought it inexpedient to give full effect to its enactments. But claims of title to such estates are merely left without the conclusive proof of hereditary title afforded by an Istimrari Sannad. It could never have been intended that the Government, by delaying to do in regard to some estates, what the Regulation enacts should be done in regard to all lands for the purpose of setting at rest all uncertainty as to titles, should secure the power to treat all such estates as held by no permanent title whatever. It follows that the existence of a proprietary estate in poliems, or other lands not permanently assessed, and the tenure by which it has been held, are matters judicially determinable on legal evidence, just as the right to any other property. (2)—Damages—Use and occupation—Demise—Permission of plaintiff — An action for damages for use and occupation does not necessarily suppose any demise. It is enough that the defendant used and occupied the premises by the permission of the plaintiff. But where it is not established that the plaintiff agreed to accept the possession of the premises by the defendant as possession held on his own behalf, no suit for damages for use and occupation lies against the defendant. KANAI LAL BISWAS v. NITAI CHAND SAHA ; NITAI CHAND SAHA v. BAIDO JINNO, 7 Ind. Cas. 492=12 C. L. J. 612.

(3)—Arrears of rent—Compensation for use and occupation of land—Making new case for plaintiff, not set up in plaint—Intention to occupy as tenant a necessary condition in suit for compensation for use and occupation of land—Lease of right to receive collections of a village not an agricultural lease—Registration of lease—Transfer of Property Act, ss. 107 and 117—Oral evidence inadmissible to prove lease for a term exceeding one year.—The plaintiff sued M and E for arrears of rent on the allegation that they had taken from him a theka of a mauza from 1302 to 1306 Fasli at an annual rent of Rs. 1,059 14-3 and that Rs. 515-7-0 as arrears for 1305 Fasli and the whole of the rent for the year 1306 Fasli were due from them. M admitted the lease and E denied it. The lease was an oral one. The Assistant Collector held that, inasmuch as under s. 107 of the Transfer of Property Act, a lease of immoveable property for any term exceeding one year could be made only by a registered instrument, no oral evidence could be given to prove the alleged lease. But finding, however, that E had been in possession of the village during 1305 Fasli he passed a decree against him and M jointly for the arrears of rent claimed in respect of that year on the ground that E was liable to pay reasonable compensation for the use and occupation of the village. E appealed to the District Judge who dismissed the suit as against him. He found that E. even supposing that he was in possession during the year 1305 Fasli, did not enter into possession with the intention of occupying as a tenant. Held, that the alleged lease was a lease of the right to receive the collections of a village and not a lease for agricultural purposes, within the meaning of s. 117 of the Transfer of Property Act, that the provisions of the s. 107 of that Act, were applicable to it, and that oral evidence to prove it was inadmissible. In order that a suit for use and occupation may be maintainable, one of the conditions which must be fulfilled is that the defendant is in possession intending to occupy as a tenant. Held, therefore, that assuming that the Revenue Court has jurisdiction to award, in a proper case, reasonable compensation for the use and occupation of land, it could not award such compensation in this case. Held further that as the plaintiff made no claim for use and occupation against E, and as the case went to trial merely on the point whether the village had been leased for five years to E, the Assistant Collector was wrong in making a new case for the plaintiff and in decreeing his suit against E, as if he had made a claim for use and occupation. JANG BAHADUR SINGH v. ESHAN ALI, 5 O.C. 222.

(1)—Continued enjoyment—Question of fact.—No rule can be laid down as to what will or will not constitute a continuance of enjoyment, as of right, when there is no exercise of it for any given period. That must depend upon the circumstances of each case and the nature of the right claimed. The question of continued enjoyment is a question of fact. It is an inference to be drawn from facts. JANHAVI CHOWDHURANI v. BINDU BASHINI CHOWDHURANI, 26 C. 593=3 C.W.N. 610.

User —continued.

(2) – User —Proof of right —No precise period of enjoyment is required to prove a right of user; and there is no objection in point of law to the finding of such a right from the fact of there having been a user for a very long time. MULLICK KURIM BAKSH v. HARRIHAR MANDAR, 5 B.L.R. 174=13 W.R. 440.

(3) —User —Prescription —Construction.—Proof of uninterrupted user for 12 years and upwards is sufficient to establish a prescriptive right to water. The term "barabar" in respect to user construed to mean "all along" for "always," certainly for more than 12 years. KARTIK CHANDRA SIRKAR v. KARTIK CHANDRA DEY, 3 B. L. R. A. C 166=11 W. R. 522. (11 W. R. 236, Com on.)

(4) —"User" —Presumption of legal origin.—Where there has been a well-established user extending over a long series of years, it is the duty of the Court, if possible, to find a legal origin of the existing facts—SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. HAIBATRAO, 6 Bom. L.R. 43=28 B. 276.

(5)—Easement —Inference from user —English Law.—In a suit to establish a right of way, it would not be right in this country to draw the same inference from user as would be proper in a case arising in England. The English rule that user must be presumed to be as of right must not be applied without reference to the habits of the people of this country and the particular circumstances of each case. SHAIKH KHODA LUKSH v. SHAIKH TAJUDDIN, 8 C.W. N. 359.

(6)—User—Proof of right—Acquisition thereof. —A user all along or from before does not necessarily prove a right. It must be proved to have existed from a time from which the right would be gained or presumed to have been gained. MOOKTARAM BHUTTACHARJEE v. HURRO CHUNDER ROY, 7 W.R. 1. [F., 12 W.R. 76, 14 W.R. 349, 14 W R 199.]

(7) Right of way—User —Prescription—Limitation—Implied consent.—A user for only 4 or 5 years is not sufficient to show a right by prescription. Defendant prepared a road across the plaintiff's lands. Held that it was quite open to the plaintiff to sue within the ordinary period of limitation, and that no consent could be inferred from the fact that the plaintiff did not sue immediately after the commencement of the preparation or the completion of the road. HURO SOONDUREE DEBIA v. RAM DHUN BHUTTACHARJEE, 7 W.R 276. [D, 12 W.R. 519.]

(8)—Wrongful interruption—Right of user—Assertion of right—Delay —Acquiescence.—Where a right of user is interfered with and steps are immediately taken to assert that right, it cannot be destroyed by wrongful interruption; but when no steps whatever are taken for a long time, as for instance, for 6 years, we may safely presume acquiescence. HEERA LALL KOOER v. PURMESSUR KOOER, 15 W.R. 401.

User—continued.

(9)—Easement—User interrupted from time to time.—The mere fact of user for any number of years will not be sufficient to confer a right if the user be, from time to time, interrupted by the owner resuming, as occasion may require, the exclusive use of his land. In such a case, the character of the user is changed. It will be treated as permissive only and not as the exercise of a right. What is the true character of the user is, in each case, to be inferred from the circumstances, AUKHOY COOMAR CHUCKERBUTTY v. MOLLAH NOBEE NOWAS, 13 W.R. 449.

(10)—Rights of user of easements incidental to house, not affected by lease of house to stranger.—The contention in this case was limited to a drain and to a passage. The lower appellate Court wrongly considered that the plaintiff had really no right to what he claimed, inasmuch as the circumstances under which the right was created had ceased and a new state of things had arisen, in which the introduction of a stranger into the premises had become possible. The High Court was of opinion that the point never having been raised by the defendant at all, the Judge was in error in having raised or allowed the point to be raised at the trial. The Judge should have confined himself to the existence or not of the plaintiff's right to the user which he claimed as incidental to his property; if the Judge found such right to exist, it was not one to be exercised conditionally, nor one that could be annulled by the introduction of any such new feature as the tenancy of the house created by its owner in favour of a stranger. MUSSAMUT AMJUDEE BEGUM v. SYUD AHMED HOSSEIN, 6 W.R. 314.

(11)—Contract of tenancy—Right of tenant to use a plot as threshing floor, a term of such contract.—On evidence that a tenant has, for a great many years, used a particular piece of land along with other tenants as a threshing floor for threshing out crops, it is competent to the Court to find, there being no evidence to the contrary, that the right to use the plot of land for such purpose was part of the contract of tenancy. (1)—"Utbandi holding," what is—Its incidents.—"Utbandi" is applied to land held for a year, or rather for a season only. The general custom is for the husbandman to get verbal permission to cultivate a certain amount of land in a particular place at a rate agreed upon when the crop is on the ground. The land is measured and the rent is assessed on it. The Utbandi ryot abandons altogether (i.e., has no right to claim again) any land, except such as he has under cultivation in any given year. (2)—Suit for rent of—Abandonment—Notice—Onus—Benami sale—Admission by vendor, effect of.—No notice is required to be given by the tenant to the landlord in abandoning an utbandi tenure, as it is a settlement for a year only. In a suit for rent by an assignee of the landlord, when the landlord admits that he has sold the arrears of rent to the plaintiff, and, when such landlord is also a party to the suit, it is not open to the Court to find that the sale is benami. AMRITA LAL MUKERJEE v. GIRIDHAR GHOSE. 5 C.L.J. 398 = 11 C.W.N. 581. (17 C. 393, R.)
